It's important that donations are made to a variety of these campaigns because while all are in the general area of the campsite and do communicate, the different campaigns don't always or can't always share different resources. Grab a group of friends, make strips of paper, and shuffle to make donations.

It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

loitering and vagrancy laws are rooted in the black codes that were enacted mainly in 1865-6 following the civil war explicitly as a means of arresting free black people and incarcerating them as a source of involuntary unpaid labor to replace the institution of slavery that had just been abolished the day that tumblr learns that it isn't progressive whatsoever to shame people for being attracted to men is the day the world heals. there's nothing progressive about shaming gay and bisexual men using homophobic tactics and spreading biphobia toward bisexual women.

you know what? shaming straight women for liking men isn't cute either. i genuinely hope that every straight girl has a fulfilling and happy relationship. when you put the blame on women for even dating "grrr evil men" in the first place you ignore the amount of abuse that women face in relationships and you excuse the men who are misogynistic and pieces of shit by emphasizing the idea that it's normal for men to treat women like garbage.

Come again? The bar falls silent. No one dares to make a sound, as you have just said a very poor choice of words at a very dangerous time. I remain slumped over the bar, not looking back to you. One hand limply holding an almost empty bottle, the other hand cradling my head. I repeat the question, this time louder. Come again?! You can hear me slur the words, the sentence sounds like a real struggle for me to get out. I'm clearly intoxicated. A bead of sweat rolls down your face as you realize you might have just fucked up in a very major way. Everyone else in the bar is pretending to not notice what is going on. The bartender idly washes a mug with a cloth. His eyes are closed and he's muttering something to himself. A handful of people hurriedly leave. One person looks back at you, a look of sorrow on their face. They almost say something, but shake their head and cast their eyes down to the floor, and leave. But not you. You stand, petrified. A quick look at me reveals I'm still at the bar. You look to the exit, there's still time. But there's not, there's not, there's not. Your fate was sealed the moment you opened your mouth. Mother fuck.. what did you say?! *I slowly rise from my stool and being to lumber over to you. I look a mess. My hair is unkempt, I haven't shaved in what looks like months, there are dark heavy bags under my eyes, my shirt is stained and has holes in it, and I'm missing a shoe. But the main thing you notice is the gun tucked into my jeans, and my massive muscle arms that look like they were made for punching. You know that song about the boots that were made for walking? Yeah, it's like that only instead of boots it's my muscles and instead of walking it's punching. As I drunkenly sway over to you, you think of your family... Will they mourn you, or will they try and forget this blotch of stupidity, that their child insulted the Jory publicly, ever happened to their family? Your thoughts are cut short as I now stand face to face with you. I grab your face and pull you even closer.*

You close your eyes and see God looking at you, shrugging. 'Pft, you brought this upon yourself dude.' He says as he waves his hands at you dismissively. But instead of the gun, my hands grab yours. Your eyes jolt open and the anger is gone from my face. There is only sadness.* Left me... * I fall to the floor and sob.*

ok, let me explain

I’ve never really done anything like this before. I just wanted to make a comic based on the greatest post on this website and I wanted it to become more and more detailed as it went along. It took me a little over a year to finish and it was all made without using a tablet.

Please click on the individual images to get the full experience. Thank you.

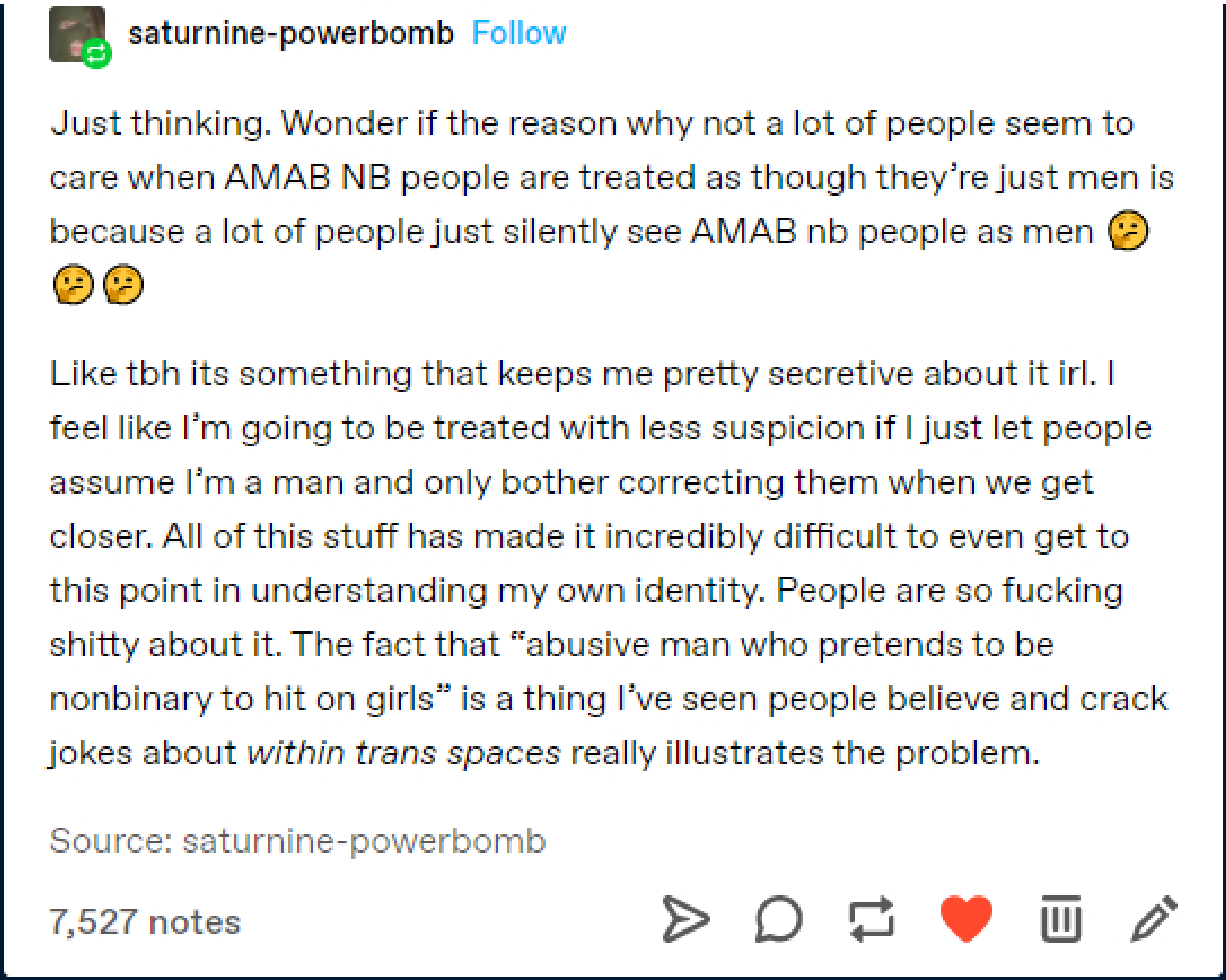
Basically any time I decide to say "hey nonbinary people get treated like shit and people in my position specifically get left out in the cold a lot" I lose a number of followers. I'm pretty sure I've had people block me over literally just saying that. I hate that nonbinary issues often relegated to the status of "discourse" instead of, like, actual threats that we experience and the only people I can talk to about it are other nonbinary people.

saturnine-powerbomb Follow

I've lost count of the number of death threats I've gotten just for, like, existing, so I'd really like it if folks stopped acting like being nonbinary is ezmode



saturnine-powerbomb Follow

Just thinking. Wonder if the reason why not a lot of people seem to care when AMAB NB people are treated as though they're just men is because a lot of people just silently see AMAB nb people as men 🤔🤔🤔

Like tbh its something that keeps me pretty secretive about it irl. I feel like I'm going to be treated with less suspicion if I just let people assume I'm a man and only bother correcting them when we get closer. All of this stuff has made it incredibly difficult to even get to this point in understanding my own identity. People are so fucking shitty about it. The fact that "abusive man who pretends to be nonbinary to hit on girls" is a thing I've seen people believe and crack jokes about within trans spaces really illustrates the problem.

We need to dismantle the systems in place that allow white people to get away with offering black people sub-par services based on the excuse that our bodies are more difficult to work with. Black hair is not more difficult than white hair, it simply requires a different skill set. Tattooing vibrant tattoos on black skin isn't more difficult than tattooing white skin, it simply requires a different skill set. Photographing black people isn't more difficult than photographing white people, it simply requires an understanding of photography. Doing makeup on black skin isn't more difficult than doing makeup on white skin, it simply requires different products. Working with black people is not more difficult than working with white people you've all just been taught that it's not valuable and therefore not worth learning how.

quaint-kelila

This is extremely similar to the dilemma faced by disabled people. It is no more expensive to design a building with ramps instead of stairs, it's only when you create the building first and have to tear down the stairs and replace them that you incur costs. If we teach the skills of inclusion from the beginning, there should be no additional costs for services and accessiblity for anybody.

Initially I wasn't sure I wanted to diverge from the axis of race over to disability, but I actually think that the analogy of that building and how it's only after we've institutionalized inequality that costs are incurred trying to fix it, is a valuable one so thanks for the contribution.

practicingtheliberalarts

The thing that makes me nuts about syntax is that describing syntax is fucking awesome, and it reveals so much about how humans think and are able to organize information and feelings and a world-view. But theorizing syntax is just a series of waking nightmares that leaves everyone more alienated and less wise about the human condition and the nature of language, which is the entire goddamn point of linguistics in the first place.

I'm still pinching myself like is this my life? I have a life? I'm alive?

Moving on after trauma is so weird it's just like… hard to explain but imagine yourself in a hotel and there's absolute hell going on in your floor. It was jjst bombed gassed and lit on fire and everyone is dying and vomiting coughing up blood and pleading with terrorists not to rip out another finger nail and begging to call their sons and daughters to say goodbye, and someone has you tied to a chair and is funneling concrete into your esophagus while your eyes bleed from tear gas. And then they throw you in an elevator and send you going up. The elevator dings and you get off the floor and meagerly limp with black eye and tattered clothes stained with suit, coughing from smoke inhalation. And there's nothing going on, on this floor it's just pristine. A fine banquet, a diner with luxury chairs and wealthy people rubbing elbows and gnashing their faces off on fine wine and expensive cheese with their pinky's in the air. And you're just really confused by the stark contrast and sort of overwhelmed how it's even possible you're here right now when you were just there and you can still feel the sweat on the back of your neck from the fires heat that was boiling people alive and you still feel sick to your stomach as that was boiling people alive and you still feel sick to your stomach as the weight of solid concrete sits at the bottom of your gut like a rock about to explode. Your palms are still sweating and your heart is still racing and thoughts of imment death and danger are still tracing through your mind a hundred miles a minute... and in the state of dazed shock you stand there mumbling to yourself sort of in a trance fumbling over your own feet as you walk around like your in a dizzy haze.

Everything is fine but, nothing feels right anymore.

And you're like, where, did it all go? It was just here, and now it's not. And I can't get it off my mind, I can't wake up from the nightmare I'm still living in it. But no one else can see it or feel it or touch it or hear it.

They just see me, an absolute nervous wreck and they wonder what's wrong with me when my hands shake at a dinner table or, I seem far away while they wave their hand in front of my face and I don't blink.

How can any of it feel real? When you were just in a room that was on fire and suddenly you're, not. Though they exist in the same building. How can that be possible. It's not so, surely this isn't reality.

It never feels real, it never feels "right" ever again. You're just constantly asking yourself, what happened to the room that was on fire where did it go, and, is this room going to catch on fire too? Where are terrorists?

Surely they are coming soon. Surely the fire will be here- soon. But it never comes and you're always left on the edge of your seat in this strange place that doesn't feel right, forever waiting for it to feel right and waiting for the impossible to happen.

No one is coming to pour concrete down your throat anymore but. You constantly anticipate their arrival. Hiding, from nothing. And you look absolutely insane doing it. You're wrought with the anxiety. You can't sleep. You can never relax. Never.

Because someone could be coming through those elevator doors at any minute and what are you going to do then? How will you escape when you can't.

Every room is just another place to feel trapped in, and every where you go you can't get away from the feeling of constant fear.

So you drown it out, you dissociate, you lean into every escape and distraction you can find, and god forbid you discover something to numb it out and make the incessant running flow of thought cease and go completely quiet. It grabs a hold of you, and you never let it go. And then the addiction destroys you fast, but not as fast as the ptsd would of. Because it was either drugs or suicide.

Cruella, the story of a puppy slaughter

As the puppies killer said: "I am a woman. Hear me roar" — Yiks. No. Please. No.

Disney @Disney

Here's your first look at Emma Stone as Cruella de Vil in Disney's Cruella. The film, also starring Emma Thompson, Paul Walter Hauser, and Joel Fry, comes to theaters May 28, 2021. #D23Expo

Traducir Tweet

An analysis of CRUELLA, Disney's next mistake.

The main problem with this movie is that it would be highly difficult to make people empathize with a woman who kindnapp puppies to slaughter and skin them for a new coat.

It's not a story about a witch who make a sleeping curse on a newborn baby because she wasn't invited to her baptism. It was easier building a story of love betrayed behind Angelina Jolie's Maleficent, while is not as easy explaining why Cruella is so obsessed with killing domestic animals for their fur. Dogs are human's best friends and people hate when dogs are in danger in the movies. People will never empathize with Cruella as they did with Maleficent.

However, the actress chosed to play Cruella de Vil in Cruella is Emma Stone. I was very surprised when I discovered she was her who played Baroness Abigail Masham in The Favourite, because I thought it was Margot Robbie (Why the hell there are so many Hollywood actress that looks perfectly alike?). I loved to hate Emma Stone's character in that movie, but here we have Disney. Dislikable characters as protagonist are not their mark.

Critics said that this version of Cruella de Vil is a mixture of Ocean Eleven and The Devil Wears Prada (well, wasn't the 1996 live action too a mixture between that two movies?).

Cruella, which is set in 1970s London amidst the punk rock revolution, follows a young grifter named Estella, a clever and creative girl determined to make a name for herself with her designs. Emma Stone's character is a lowly department store worker, that befriends a pair of young thieves who appreciate her appetite for mischief, and together they are able to build a life for themselves on the London streets. One day, Estella's flair for fashion catches the eye of the Baroness von Hellman, a fashion legend who is devastatingly chic and terrifyingly haute, played by two-time Oscar winner Emma Thompson, wearing her deceased mother's locket, which was lost at the Baroness' estate the night she died. But their relationship sets in motion a course of events and revelations that will cause Estella to embrace her wicked side and become the raucous, fashionable and revenge-bent Cruella.

Some elements to notice here, that we will see more in details later: Baroness von Hellman is clearly a noble woman of foreign origins (German, maybe? Or Dutch), in her name there is the word "Hell" that we probably remember for Cruella's family estate, "Hell Hall". Cruella too seems to come from a foreign noble family, in her surname we see the predicate of nobility (de - Baroness' one is von). This is curious, but I don't know how relevant would be in the plot.

Cruella director Craig Gillespie previously directed I, Tonya, which followed figure skater Tonya Harding. While not excusing Harding's actions, that film takes a comedic look at her life and audiences could see how her struggles informed the deeply flawed person she became. You never root for Tonya Harding though. But Cruella is a Disney movie and it is not Disney's way to do that kind of thing or to have an unlikable protagonist, they are selling as a new-wave feminist icon.

Let's see more of Cruella's evil in her main rapresentation in media:

1 - The book

Not a lot of persons know it, but Disney's classic 101 Dalmatians of 1961 was based on a book of the same name written by British author Dodie Smith in 1956. It was originally serialized in Woman's Day, an American magazine, as The Great Dog Robbery, and details the adventures of two dalmatians named Pongo and Missis as they rescue their puppies from a fur farm.

In this book is firstly intruduced Cruella De Vil. She is a former classmate of Mrs. Dearly, the dogs owner, who was a menacing school girl and was expelled for drinking ink (let's remeber this detail, because it's important).

Cruella is depicted as a pampered and glamorous London heiress, the last of her prosperous and notorious family, who appears wealthy but is in fact heavily in debt. She is married to a furrier, whose first name is never mentioned, even by Cruella, and it appears she married him solely due to his occupation rather than because she loved him. When Mrs. Dearly asks Cruella what her married name is, Cruella retorts that—in contrast to the usual patriarchal custom—she has made her husband adopt her surname as his own, in an effort to carry on her family name. She and her husband have no children. Cruella is portrayed as the tyrannical figure in the marriage, and her husband as a meek, subservient man who seldom speaks and obeys his wife entirely. He supplies Cruella with extravagances, such as the white mink cloak she often wears with skin-tight satin gowns and ropes of jewels in contrasting colours, such as a black dress with ropes of pearls, or a green dress with ropes of rubies.

At a dinner at Cruella's London house, the Dearly couple noticed Cruella's odd eatings behavior: all her food is strangely-coloured and tastes strongly of pepper. When Mr. Dearly comments she might find her mink cloak too warm for a summer's evening, Cruella laughs that she never finds anything too warm; she constantly stokes a roaring fire and complains of being cold despite the unbearable heat.

This details of Cruella's life behavior are very symbolical: coldness in literature is associated with death and corpse (in the brithis poem, The Unquiet Grave, the dead-sweetheart of the protagonist has "clay-cold lips"), while pepper in popular superstition has lot of meaning.

In her name and appearance we can found also a reference to the Goddess Hela, from which came the word Hell, who is described as half young and half old. She is the queen of Hell, were lies the persons who die for an old age and not gloriously in battle.

Peppers are considered the "demon's spice" in southern Italy. However, in Naples you can find red horns talismans, which resembles a hot pepper, used for personal protection, or to protect your car or your house from the evil eye and gossipers. But the twisted talisman is meant to represent a phallus, not a hot pepper, so the strength and fertility associated with the symbol are associated with good luck.

Another one says that you should never hand a hot pepper directly to a friend—superstition has it that is will bring discord into the friendship.

So, Cruella is always cold as a corpse and loves eating the "devil's spice", that brings discord if it was served to a friend. This is very significant and seems to anticipate more scaring informations Dodie Smith served to us.

However, in the book Cruella has white Persian cat, but she admits she detests and only keeps because of the cat's value. The cat hates Cruella, longing to avenge her many litters of kittens (all of which Cruella drowned).

Cruella de Vil is selfish, she doesn't like animals at all and abuses them with no sign of emotion. The abuse of animals is part of so-called homicidal triad or Macdonald triad. This theory in criminology refers to the idea that there are three signs that can indicate whether someone will grow up to be a serial killer or other kind of violent criminal: being cruel or abusive to animals, especially pets; setting fire to objects or otherwise committing minor acts of arson; regularly wetting the bed during childhood or teenage years.

This is quite interesting, because Dodie Smith in the book gives us some very disturbing details about de Vil family: in Chapter 10, titled "What They Saw From The Folly", Pongo and his mate Missis travel to Suffolk at the ancestral home of the de Vils, Hell Hall. Here, they meet Colonel, an old Shepard dog, who tells them a very scary story:

GIF by starrywisdomsect

GIF by starrywisdomsect

> “Your husband has asked me to tell him the history of Hell Hall. Now come and lie down.”
>
> Pongo was as anxious to see the puppies as Missis was, but he knew they should sleep first, so he coaxed her to lie down. The Colonel pulled the straw round both of them.
>
> “It’s chilly in here—not that I feel it,” he said. Then he sent the cat to start collecting food for the next meal, and began to talk in his rumbling voice.
> This was the story he told.
> Hell Hall had once been an ordinary farmhouse named Hill Hall—it had been built by a farmer named Hill. It was about two hundred years old, the same age as the farm where the Sheepdog and the cat lived.

"The two houses are quite a bit alike," said the Colonel, "only our place is painted white and well cared for. I remember Hell Hall before it was painted black and it really wasn't bad at all."

The farmer named Hill had got into debt and sold Hill Hall to an ancestor of Cruella de Vil's, who liked its lonely position on the wild heath. He intended to pull the farmhouse down and build himself a fantastic house which was to be a mixture of a castle and a cathedral,and had begun by building the surrounding the wall and the Folly.

(The Colonel had heard all this while visiting the Vicarage.)

Once the wall, with its heavy iron gates, was finished, strange rumours began to spread. Villagers crossing the heath at night heard screams and wild laughter. Were there prisoners behind the prison-like wall?

People began to count their children carefully.

"Some of the stories—Well, I shan't tell you just as you're falling asleep," said the Colonel. "I didn't hear them at the Vicarage. But I will tell you something—because it won't upset you as it naturally upset the villagers. It was said that this de Vil fellow had a long tail. I didn't hear that at the Vicarage, either."

Missis had taken in very little of this and was now fast asleep, but Pongo was keenly interested.

"By this time," the Colonel went on, "people were calling the place Hell Hall, and the de Vil chap plain devil. The end came when the men from several villages arrived one night with lighted torches, prepared to break open the gates and burn the farmhouse down. But as they approached the gates a terrific thunderstorm began and put the torches out. Then the gates burst open—seemingly of their own accord—and out came de Vil, driving a coach and four. And the story is that lightning was coming not from the skies but from de Vil—blue forked lightning. All the men ran away screaming and never came back > lightning. All the men ran away screaming and never came back. And neither did de Vil. The house stood empty for thirty years. Then someone rented it. It's been rented again and again, but no one ever stays."

> "And it still belongs to the de Vil family?" asked Pongo.

Even if it is not written openly, we can easily understand that Cruella de Vil ancestor was a serial killer: he murdered and tortured people in his house. He was a dangerous, insane guy with a tail and seems also he can summon storms to save his own life.

Remeber that "Cruella de Vil" is a pun of the words "cruel" and "devil", an allusion that is emphasized by having her Suffolk manor nicknamed "Hell Hall", but in the book this is more evident because of the fact that Cruella's ancestor seemed to be a real life demon. Above I made a reference to the predicate of nobility, that is present in Cruella's surname too. Title of Nobility may be composed by two parts: the Title itself (Baron, Viscount, Count, Marquess, Duke or Prince) followed by its Predicate (of, de, von) which indicates a geographic or allegoric name. So, we have Baroness (title) + von. In Cruella's case we have only "de", so we can deduce she is part of a lower grade untitled nobility from a foreign State, maybe France: de Vil, could be a contraction for "de Ville". "Ville" in middle age French means farm or village, while in modern day French means city or town. And Cruella's is deeply connected to a country house in Suffolk that was nicknamed "Hell House".

GIF by bestwitchsam

Couriosly, this detail would ring a bell, expecially if you are familiar with classic Gothic literature. So, you probably have noticed that the surname “de Vil” is also a literary allusion to Bram Stoker's Dracula (1897), in which the realty firm Mitchell, Sons & Candy write a letter to Lord Godalming, informing him that the purchaser of a house in Piccadilly, London is “a foreign nobleman, Count De Ville” (Chapter 20, Jonathan Harker's Journal, LETTER, MITCHELL, SONS & CANDY TO LORD GODALMING) and also in Chapter 26, where Jonathan Harker and Van Helsing, during their hunt for Count Dracula's new hut, they met a jew lawyer that have received the order from a “Mr de Ville from London” to deliver a mysterious box in a castle in the nearby. Count De Ville, however, proves to be an alias for Count Dracula himself and the mysterious box is his coffin. More relevant could be the fact that Dracula has the power to summon storms too.

This reference to vampire could also be found in the 1961 version of 101 Dalmatians, in the songs Roger writes when Cruella make her first appearance on the screen: in the last lines of the song, Cruella is called “this vampire bat, this inhuman beast”.

So, as we have seen Cruella's coldness in the previous lines, her sunerme that sounds a lot like Dracula's alias, her mysterious ancestor with a tail, supernatural powers and a passion for torture people, there are so many details that allow us to think she is more than a common human woman.

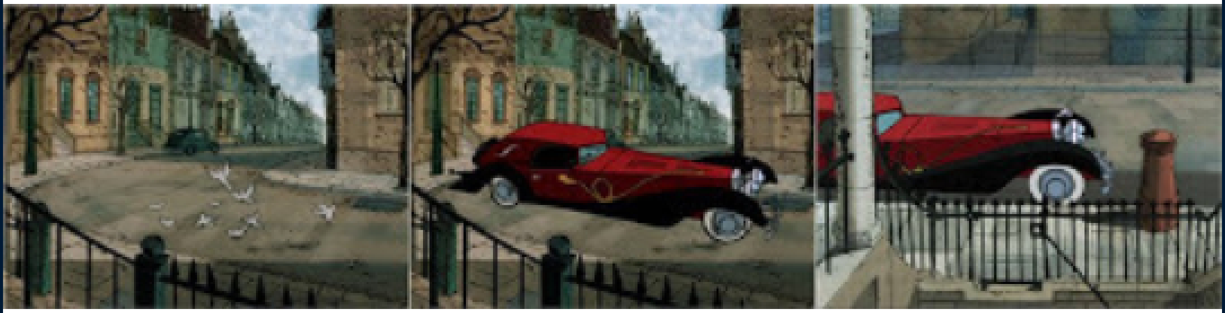
2 - 1961 Adaptation

Keeping in mind what we said above about Cruella's peculiarities in the book, it's not a surprise observing that Cruella's appearence in the 1961 version of 101 Dalmatians is very unique, if compared to the other characters: Cruella looks more like a skeleton than a human being: she is very underweight, boney, with high cheek bones and a very pale - white - skin tone that make contrast with the pink one of other characters, and her face has a huge resemblance with a skull and the green smoke that surrounded her while she holds her cigarette add a supernatural atmosphere at her look.

Taking a look way back into the 1950's, we first get a glimpse of green associated with evil and magical powers in Sleeping Beauty (1959), where the color green is continuously used as a harbinger for Maleficent's evil: the green glow around her castle, the curse of the spinning wheel illuminates a bright green, even in her dragon form she breathes an acid-green flame! So why green? Green can mean a number of things: it can be associated with growth, healing and nature, but it can also carry some negative connotations.

Obviously, Disney is not trying to conjoin those qualities with their most evil characters, so we take a look at the negative aspects this color carries: greed, envy, and sickness. All of these traits fall under the character of Disney villains. In Cruella's case, after having her offer to buy the puppies denied, she is filled with resentment (envy) towards the Dearly, ultimately exacting her desperate need to have a new Dalmatian fur coat (greed) by becoming obsessed (sickness) with kindapping and murdering puppies.

Enter Cruella and her companion – the color red, that is rapresented by her car. The association of color red to Cruella's car emphasize her personality traits.



Even if though and brave heroes are supposed to wear red capes, red is more commonly featured in character designs for villains. Red, as well as green, is often associated both with heroic and villainous qualities.

Red is violence, anger, and aggression, and it frequently indicates danger. Red is the color of fire and blood, so it is associated with energy, war, danger, strength, power, determination, as well as passion, desire, and love. Dark red is associated with vigor, willpower, rage, anger, leadership, courage, longing, malice, and wrath. Red is associated with hell and the devil.

There’s no denying that a character like Captain Hook from Peter Pan or Jafar from Aladdin are determined, bloody, but anger influence their characters designs as well.

In the book Cruella's car was black and white, like her hair, but producers choose red as color to evidence Cruella's personal evil: wrath, danger, blood and also determination. The inspiration for Cruella's car comes from 1936 Alvis Speed 20 SD Drophead Coupe and 1931 Bugatti Type 41 Royale 'Weinberger Cabriolet'.

This is relevant because in a lot of scenes Cruella is drawn driving in a dangerous way: she is pretty reckless when it comes to driving said car, such as making drifting turns in the streets, driving extremely fast in snowy conditions, and sometimes running other cars off the road. However, she always blames a near accident on whoever is on the receiving side of the accident. The car is shown to be very resistant to damage. We can easily say that Cruella's car is her alter ego, her driving style says a lot of her personality: she is reckless, she doesn't care of others, she is determined into chasing her schemes and she would do everything to obtain what she want. Her inability to control her car is reflective of her mental state. Her obsessive desire to acquire the Dalmatian puppies heightens as she leers over her steering wheel, speeds through city streets and bulldozes through fences in her single-minded pursuit. As the animated film neared its climax, her driving became all the more reckless, causing imminent harm to those around her, but also her appearance looks more inhuman than ever: her eyes are red and completely insane, her hairs looks more uncontrolled, messy, they fly around her head, like Medusa's snake in head. Her unchombed hair testifies that Cruella doesn't care anymore or her look. One driver yells out “Crazy woman doesn't care anymore of her look. One driver yells out "Crazy woman driver!" when she nearly pushes him off a cliff.

101 DALMATIANS CRUELLA DE VIL CRAZY DRI...
Copy link

This is important because, Cruella surname could be a reference to Dodie Smith's old car, it is also believed that the inspiration for the name began in 1939 when Dodie Smith purchased a new Rolls-Royce 25/30 "Sedanca de Ville" motorcar in which she and her pet Dalmatian "Pongo" frequently travelled, which also formed the basis of the cartoon imagery of Cruella's own motorcar.

At the beginning of the 101 Dalmatians II the car is shown to be largely intact, albeit heavily damaged, from the wreck at the end of the first film. The car falls apart as Cruella drives away after being denied entry to a furrier's shop, until there is nothing left but the engine, the frame and a seat. It is not seen again after she abandons it. This reflects the changes of Cruella's fortune and life: she looks desperate, her life is ruined, she isn't allowed to enter in luxury fur shops anymore due to being on probation for her previous crimes. Now she is not a rich and fashionable heiress, she is a well-know dogs thief and no-one wants to have something to do with her, plus at the radio there is a popular song of hate about her going on. The car is devasted because Cruella is devasted.

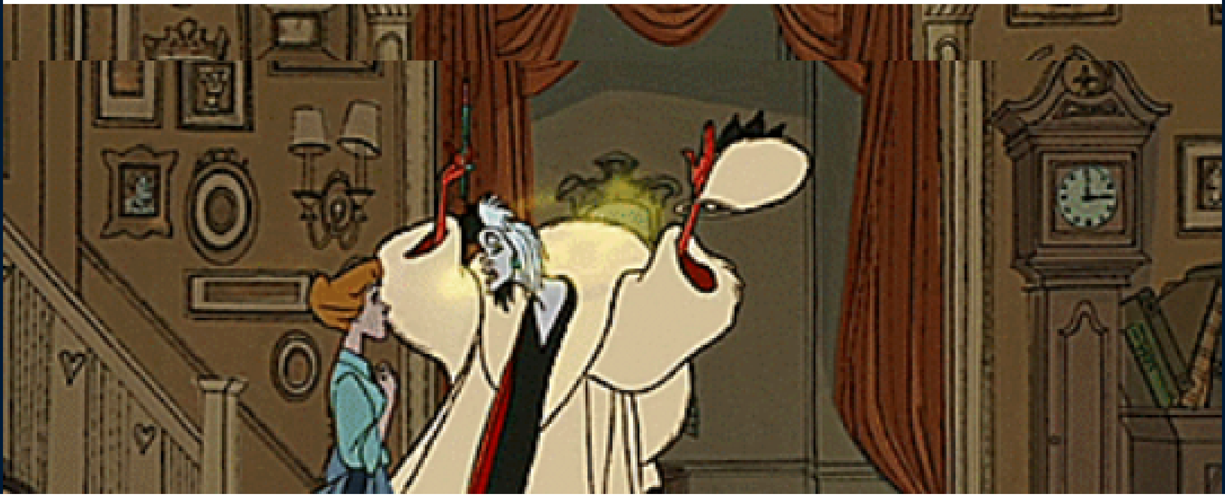
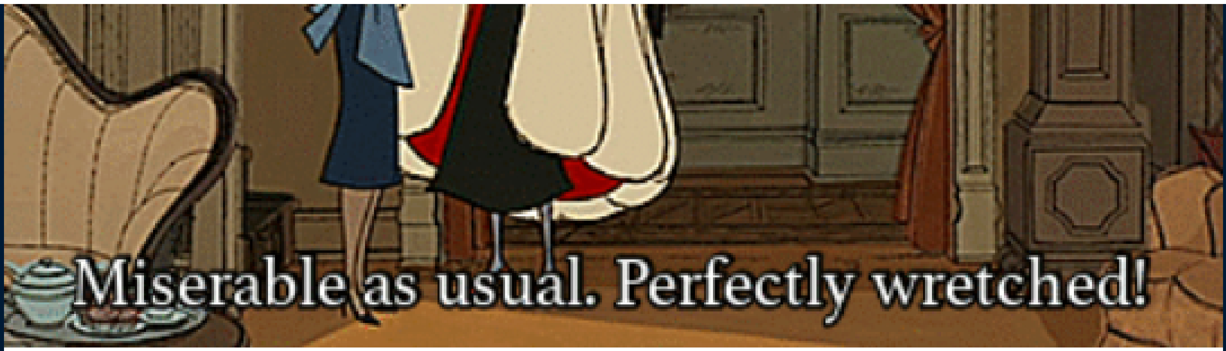
However, the first we see of Cruella is her silhouette perfectly framed by the front door glass window. The first time, the door area is a little on the green side, in the next shot of the same BG it is almost earthly brown. The important thing here is, that the door is in the shadow and the outside is brighter than the inside, yet parts of the walls are in a faint pool of light. In spite of all that, Cruella is not seen in silhouette (darker than the surrounding background area) but brighter than anything else.

As if to make way for her, yellowish green cigarette smoke precedes her in bullying Anita and Pongo. It's interesting how Roger's white (therefore not nasty) smoke never bothers anybody during the film. We see immediately that Cruella is into fashion (from the car to the cigarette) and not humble about it. She must have money to fulfil her selfish needs. She is not the family type and therefore no good by the other characters' standards.

Like the red of her shoes and gloves, acid green is completely absent from the rest of the films color palette.

It's very interesting how Cruella is always in the pool of light pushing everybody else out of it. From the moment she arrives, Anita is pushed to the side, making her reside on the sofa (her favourite spot).





Miserable as usual. Perfectly wretched!

GIF by reavenedges-lies

(See here for references: X, X and X)

Perdi is promptly hiding when the car arrives, because she (as Anita’s dog) knew her already. Upon seeing her car (“must be Cruella, your dearly devoted old school mate”), Roger closes the curtains to visually shut her out (the lighting doesn’t change, but we feel more protected). After Roger has started singing, he too hides, leaving Pongo and Anita to deal with the excentric woman. It always works to generate anticipation of a character’s awfulness by having other characters hide at the sound of his/her name.

Roger, a music composer in this film, has written a score but cannot find the lyrics and their guest, Cruella de Vil, will be his inspiration. We observe the “sinister connotations” that this aristocratic French surname has (devil/evil).

> Cruella De Vil, Cruella de Vil
> If she doesn't scare you, no evil thing will
>
> To see her is to take a sudden chill
> Cruella, Cruella de Vil

The feeling of impending threat will increase in the following stanzas. In the context of familiar use, with second person verb plural, Cruella is described as the supreme spirit of evil (“At first, you think Cruella is a devil”), but the verbs of perception (realize, see, watch,) a metonymy (her kind of eyes) and a symbol (underneath a rock = infernal place, hell) make us perceive the sinister feelings even more powerfully.

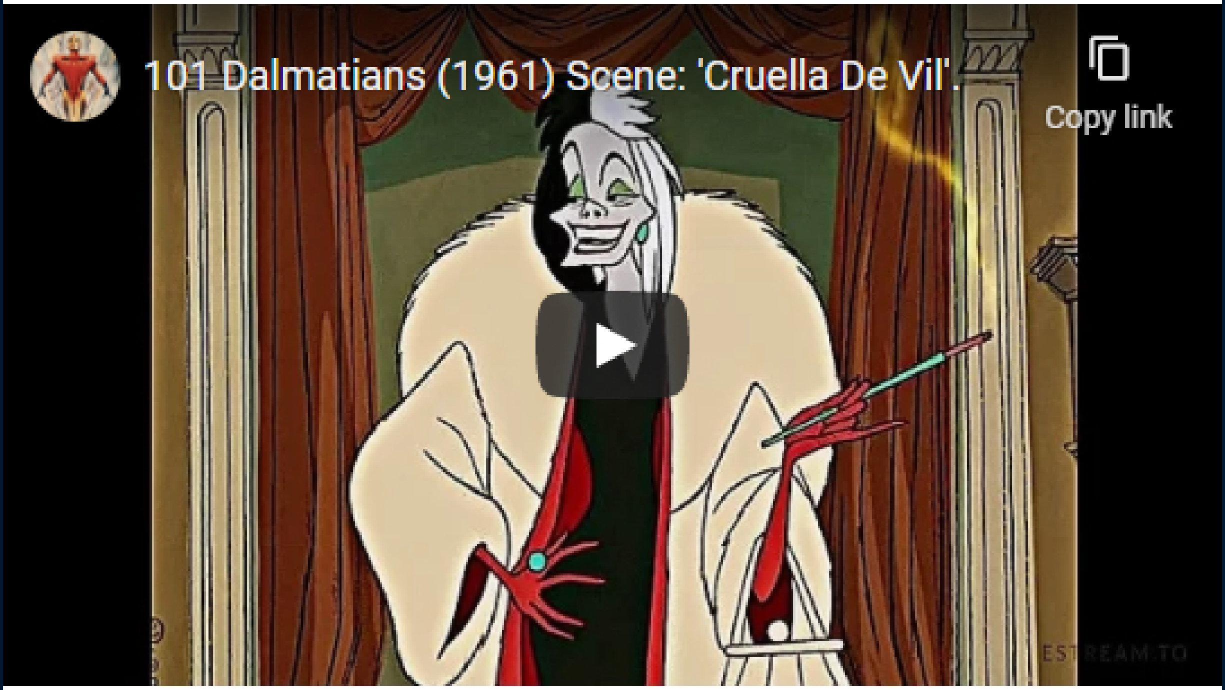
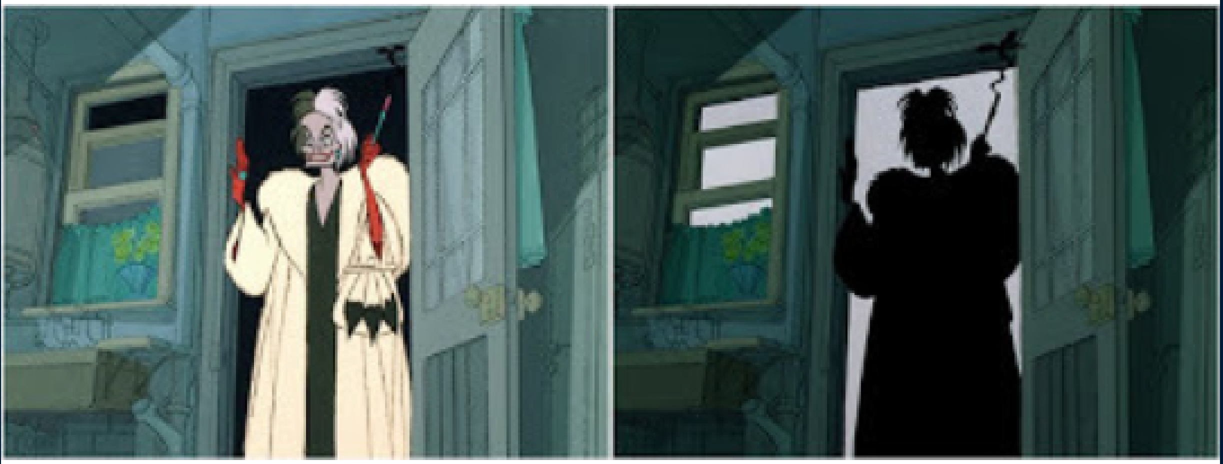
After two common nouns denoting either diabolic qualities par excellence, antonomasia, ("this vampire bat" = Dracula), or sadistic nature ("this inhuman beast") and "She is like a spider waiting for the...kill", which anticipates her wicked intention to kill the puppies.





Special effects of the second entrance of Cruella are quite immaginative: during the lightning flash for a few frames only, we see Cruella as a complete silhouette while the BG is just darkened in. Apart from that, Cruella is again completely in the light (the fixed lighting from before has been adjusted to spotlight the backdoor). Her beige coat stands out even more against the blue surroundings.

Now the wall behind her is a lot darker than before. There is simply no pool of light anymore. Again Cruella looks more like a walking fur coat, as her grey skin color doesn’t contrast too well with the rest. These three frames show some strong lines of action by the way. The red lining is mostly concealed now.

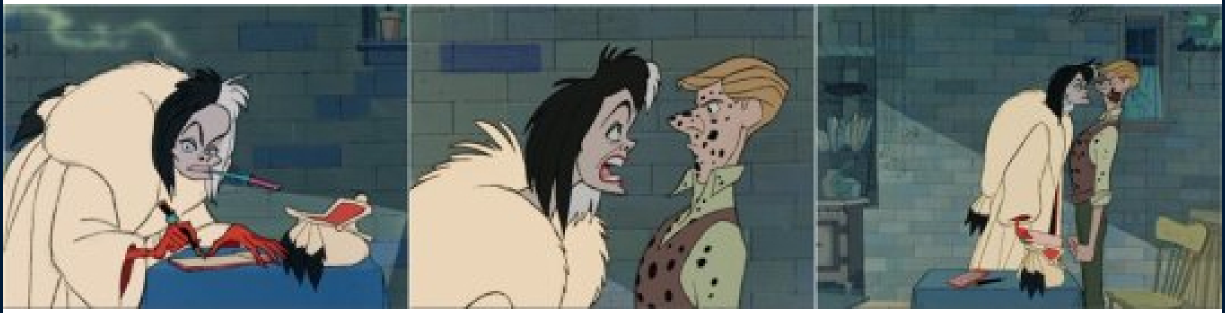
It’s also interesting how the beige clothed puppy is much less saturated than before, because again, Cruella is dominating everything.

"Fifteen. Fifteen puppies! How marvelous! How marvelous! How perfectly... Ugh! Oh, the Devil take it, They're mongrels! No spots! No spots at all! What a horrid little white rat!"

A famous part of Cruella's behavior is her not being that smart: she is dumber than a dog (ok, Pongo and Perdi are way smarter than real life dogs) and also doesn't know anything about puppies. This is an element present also in Dodie Smith's book, in fact also in the book, Cruella had a very disgusted reaction seeing for the first time the new-born puppies of Pongo and Perdi. Did she really expect Roger and Anita to sell them after saying the things she did? Yes, yes. Roger and Anita know her and they aren't surprise at her reaction, but Cruella is a woman that isn't used to be given a no as an answer, she obtains always what she wants and she doesn't see any problem at making to Roger a very generous offer for the puppies.

“Blast this pen! Blast this wretched, wretched pen!”

Cruella doesn't have a lot of patience. For anything. That includes a pen not working right away so she can write a check for Roger and Anita to purchase the newborn puppies. Plus, while trying to get the pen to work, she gets ink on Roger and Pongo, further irritating the two.



Now we see that the inside of Cruella's purse is also red. Her head is always in the shadow part of the BG. Her beige coat makes her look much stronger than Roger who with his bleak green and brown is closer in value to the background. But Roger has to face her this time. With the ink spots, he even looks like a human equivalent of Pongo as he is reluctantly articulating what Pongo would say to Cruella, could he speak. Like so many times in this movie, Roger seems almost paralyzed.

After Cruella has taken in that Roger indeed is not going to sell the puppies ("that's final") she gets really angry and completely loses her temper. Look at her coat and her hair. The red lining flashes while tearing the cheque.

"Why you horrid man...You....You...Alright, keep the little beasts for all I care! Do what you like with them! Drown them!", Cruella screams to Roger, when he refused to accept her check and sold the puppies to her.

Considering what Cruella ultimately planned to do with the puppies, the above quote was a major red flag. Roger did good, standing up to her and declaring she'd never get any one of the puppies. Cruella, however, clearly isn't used to not getting what she wants. Her reaction to not getting what she wanted was quite dark and disturbing in itself. This scene is relevant, because we see how Roger is the strong character of the couple, while Anita seems to be too kind and waek willing, and Cruella knew it, that's because she tried to push Anita into sell the puppies, when Roger denied the first time. However, Roger imposed his willing and won the first round, so Cruella rushed off the house in anger and Anita sweetly thanked her husband to protect the puppies. I wonder what would happen if it was only Anita, when Cruella tried to buy the puppies.

After that, Cruella smashes the door off screen and Pongo is barking at her until lightning strikes again. After that, Roger and Anita never see the "Devil woman" in person again.

All in all, her second appearance can be seen as an escalation of the first. She not only gets more out of control (she's contradicted by Roger that acts as Pongo alter ego, while Perdi is totally absent in this scene, because she knows that Anita cannot protect her) but also breaks the glass (foreshadowing the many broken windows of Hell Hall). Colorwise, her fur is contrasting the blue stronger than the brown of the living room. Her appearance in front of a black plane is also more dramatic than in front of the pale grey outside. This time she didn't even ring the bell before she entered.

However, back there were the 60s and people were more conservative than nowadays and Cruella personalities, compared with the two other female models hase some worrisome issues:

- 1 - Evil Indipent woman Vs happy housewife in late 50s - early 60s. Cruella's 1961 version is not married, is financially independent and unabashedly assertive. At the onset of the second wave feminist movement, as women's rights began to challenge male authority, de Vil's most empowering traits appear in an unhinged form. She seems all the more threatening when compared to the 1950s femininity of unassuming and newly married housewife Anita Dearly, who welcomes a large litter of Dalmatian puppies into her home. The American society in the 1950's was mainly founded on the ideology of the housewife, shaped by magazines and other media targeted to women. After the Second World War, marriage was the main goal for girls; family life was their major aspiration, and the manifestation of a "perfect" existence, but many of whom lead a lonely and restricted life. Therefore, their fight for autonomy started. The role of women in American society changed dramatically in the 1960s. At the beginning of the decade, women were portrayed on television and in advertisements as happy homemakers, secretaries, teachers, and nurses. Women who did not get married were depicted as unattractive, unfortunate spinsters, and those who asserted themselves were dismissed as nagging shrews. Women were to strive for beauty, elegance, marriage, children, and a well-run home. Meanwhile, popular culture ignored the fact that all women did not fit the mold that tradition had proscribed for them. Many were challenged by Betty Friedan's 1963 book, "The Feminine Mystique", which described the frustration of many women who were unfulfilled by their efforts to conform to society's ideal of femininity, living for their husbands and children, and neglecting their own ambitions and dreams. "My only true love, darling. I live for furs. I worship furs! After all, is there a woman in all this wretched world who doesn't?", says Cruella to her high school friend Anita, who is now a newly married woman and soon-to-be mother too. Cruella's one true love in life is fur. She never goes anywhere without her precious fur coat and matching handbag. Cruella often makes fun of Anita's lifestyle; she doesn't understand Anita's appreciation and love for the simple things in life. She doesn't need furs to make her happy, and that's something Cruella could never relate to. Yes, it's quite sad that the only thing Cruella really loved was fur, but screenplayers wants to be sure that viewers understand well that it was she - Cruella - that was missing out on some of the greatest parts of life, not Anita (who is a wife and soon a mother too). Nowdays we, compared to the 1950s or 1960s, know that people can pursue their happiness in different ways: being parents or not, in a couple or not, with friends or with a partner, or also alone, in a career or in a family. But this, back at the time, wasn't something people understand well yet.

- 2 - Smoking is a bad habit - for women. Cruella is a woman who smokes. Roger too smokes, but his smoke doesn't bother anyone, his smoke is white and socially acceptable, while Cruella's one is green and nasty. This is largely explained by the fact that in 1950 or 1960 youngest adult generation were born at a time when smoking was still predominantly a male habit, and were in early adulthood when a majority of men and increasing numbers of women smoked, before the health risks of smoking were widely publicized. This generation was in late childhood and early adolescence during the Second World War (1936 - 1945) when male smoking was almost ubiquitous and women began to smoke openly in large numbers, but smoking at the time were considered a more manly behavior.
- 3 - Crazy woman driver stereotype. Cruella recalls the stereotype of bad woman driver. Perhaps because depictions of crazy or even evil women behind the wheel are deeply rooted in American culture. And they are not innocent. In fact, for more than a century, such depictions have been a way to undermine women's push for social and political equality. In the 1920s driving was a way for wealthy women to asset their autonomy from their husbands and families and in the 1950 and early 1960, women drivers were not that common as nowadays.

So, yet the first Cruella had a little shape of feminism in her roots: she was portrayed like a negative model of femininity, in contrast between of the positive one of Anita.

She was a cruel, indipent not-married woman, who murder puppies and drives very bad. Feminism, or at least women's indipendency, was seen in a very negative way by late 50s and early 60s Hollywood producers, screenplayers and drawyers. And, well, yes, they were all guys.

How someone could appreciate indipendency and determination in a woman who wants to turn human's best friends into fur coats? No one could. We were thought to love dogs, we grew up with dogs in our houses, they were our game companions. Dogs are not food, dogs and domestic animals are not what we accept as fur in our coats. They are friends. It's not surprising that most of Western states banished the use of cat and dogs fur in industry, as well as the importation and commercialization of goods made of cats and dogs fur. In our mindset there isn't any comprehensive attitude toward animal abusers. We cannot be comprehensive with Cruella de Vil, even if we are more closed to her than Anita's perfect 1950s life.

while it is important to acknowledge that religion is not this universal block of toxic christianity and that other religions have different, and often healthier, fundamental ideals, it is also important to acknowledge that there are religious abuse survivors from ALL RELIGIONS. i trend i am seeing a lot on tumblr is this idea that non-christian religions are inherently less toxic, and to some extent there maybe threads of truth in it, but religious abuse is not dependent solely on the religion practiced. the religion involved can impact that the severity of the abuse, especially when you look at it's cultural saturation and how that affects the victim, but ultimately it is HOW it is practiced and how the LEADERS USE IT TO EXERT POWER AND CONTROL OVER THEIR COMMUNITY. this is why even religions and spiritualities that can be considered fairly simple or healthy can still have people coming out of it suffering from religious trauma. to claim that certain religions are free of abusive situations or concepts is incredibly dismissive to survivors from those communities.

it is so important not to idealize any religion, which is very easy to do when you look at it next toxic christianity, because no practice is universally harmless (because peoples perceptions and experiences are not universally consistent!) and no community is universally non-toxic. where there are places of power in a community, there will always be people who abuse that power, so we must respect and

My Wife Keeps Telling Me To Pour Vinegar On Bread

If you aren't pouring vinegar on bread and leaving it in the garbage can, you need to start...

I love tumblr. I love that tumblr is the best social media site of 2021.

Every other site has spent the last decade perfecting the art of targeted ads. I am a wallet of flesh and blood which must be stripped targeted ads. I am a wallet of flesh and blood which must be stripped bare and profiled and picked apart for the maximally efficient way to squeeze profit from my presence. Every other site will fold and morph itself to a shape of my liking - like a fairy tale trickster stealing memories and taking their mold - to lull me into compliance and loosen my coin purse.

Facebook sees me searching fitness equipment and injects my timeline with athletic wear ads. Reddit profiles the subreddits I follow and eagerly promotes a new coding bootcamp or cloud service at every turn. Google overhears me lamenting over my moving to-do list on voice call and fills in my "how much to tip movers" query before I've gotten the third word typed out.

Tumblr never even tried.

They could have. The information is there. The basic infrastructure, presumably, exists. Tumblr can recommend me tags based on tags I follow, blogs based on blogs I follow, even posts that for one reason or another may strike my fancy. Tumblr could be - SHOULD be - funneling this framework into advertising, as the only means that free-to-use social media platforms can turn a profit in our capitalistic hellscape.

They just don't.

Today I saw an ad for treating Hyperhidrosis - a condition, I think, in which a person sweats too much - and I saw it twice, four posts apart, and it is so incredibly benignly impersonally ineptly untargeted toward me compared to all other pinpoint-aimed advertising that I'm endeared to it. Tumblr knows NOTHING about me. 8 years, 51,000 likes, and tumblr has not learned a THING about me.

Advertisements for a mattress? Shitty mobile game ads that don't make even the slightest pretense at being anything other than a candy crush rip-off? Choose-your-own adventure games either about Royal Espionage or Choosing The Wrong Dress For Your Date with ZERO in-between.

And then this. This here. The culmination, the crown-jewel of tumblr's nihilistic non-compliance with the state of social media advertising. Any pretense of capitalistic exchange is abandoned at the gas station by the side of the road. This is not a company. This is not a product. This is not anything that fulfills the contract of consumer and seller.

THIS. THIS IS WHAT TUMBLR HAS TO OFFER INSTEAD.

"Pour vinegar on your bread, fuck you."

"Put it in the garbage, fuck you."

"Your wife says you're a fucking dumbass, fuck you."

That's it. That's the advertisement. You vinegar-breadless cuck. You virgin extraordinaire bereft of bread and garbage can. I am fucking your wife right now in our vinegar-soaked motel bed. She puffs a cigarette which I pulled from the trashcan and we both laugh heartily at her recounts of your immasculine ineptitude. I don't want your money. I don't want anything from you. Fuck you.

Amazing. Amazing. What a state of things to ring in 2021. What a great platform we all collectively choose to be on.

Information

Some take-aways

- Tumblr doesn't even have a "Data Used to Track You" section
- Facebook doesn't even have a "Data Not Linked to You" section
- Facebook's "Data Used to Track You" section contains the unsettling "other" category
- TikTok links more types of data to you than Tumblr collects in total (almost none of which is connected to you)

And this is just the summary from each app. Apple actually breaks this stuff down in detail. Go to the App Store and see for yourself.

a-tmblr-book Follow

Apple's surveys are typically self-interested (does anyone believe Apple cares about people's privacy?) but this is certainly a valuable contrast to have. It's indeed stark how unusual tumblr is in its continued resistance to identity data-mining, although it's not surprising given tumblr's history of resistance to advertising generally (tumblr didn't even start advertising until 2012!). tumblr's practices are all the more remarkable in 2121 given the extent to which datamining has become totally naturalized across platforms and internet services more generally. Alternative ways of generating income are rarely even acknowledged, as if they are somehow not possible.

By 1940, after the horny fanmail he got when playing a Nazi (in Escape) he had to get a clause into his contract saying that if he played a Nazi, it'd have to be clear he was the bad guy. He was THAT much hotter in it than the jerkass hero. He honestly was the original Hot Villain Actor Who's Wonderful IRL.

The bloke (Conrad Veidt) was an outspoken opponent of antisemitism, and when he refused to divorce his wife (who was Jewish), Joseph Goebbels had him blacklisted.

He also donated tons and tons of money to poor children who had been negatively effected by the Blitz in London after he moved to the US, following his becoming a naturalised-British citizen after leaving Germany in the 1930s.

Don't forget that in 1919, he starred in "Different from the Others", a German film protesting the anti-homosexuality laws in place. It's widely regarded as the first pro-gay film. Conrad Veidt was a goddamn hero.

He was also the highest paid member of the cast in “Casablanca” (where he played a Nazi officer, again), even if he only got second billing, because he was THAT big a star.

He and his first wife divorced after… well she said it better than I ever could.

"I excused a lot of his failings and whims because I loved him. But one day he did something to me that I couldn't forgive. I was singing that evening at the cabaret. I left him home and he told me: "I invited a few friends; we'll dine while we wait for you." And it just so happened I had received a new dress from Paris. That evening, after work, I arrived home and what do I see? All these gentlemen dressed as women. And Conrad had put on my Paris dress. At this point, I divorced!"

And as Anita Loos put it

"Any Berlin lady of the night might turn out to be a man; the prettiest girl on the street was Konrad [sic] Veidt."

Conrad Veidt was an amazing human. To quote his wikipedia page:

> Veidt fervently opposed the Nazi regime and later donated a major portion of his personal fortune to Britain to assist in the war effort. Soon after the Nazi Party took power in Germany, by March 1933, Joseph Goebbels was purging the film industry of anti-Nazi sympathizers and Jews, and so in April 1933, a week after Veidt's marriage to Ilona Prager, a Jewish woman, the couple emigrated to Britain before any action could be taken against either of them

> Goebbels had imposed a "racial questionnaire" in which everyone employed in the German film industry had to declare their "race" to continue to work. When Veidt was filling in the questionnaire, he answered the question about what his Rasse (race) was by writing that he was a Jude (Jew). Veidt was not Jewish, but his wife was Jewish, and Veidt would not renounce the woman he loved. Additionally, Veidt, who was opposed to antisemitism, wanted to show solidarity with the German Jewish community, who were in the process of being stripped of their rights as German citizens in the spring of 1933. As one of Germany's most prominent actors, Veidt had been informed that if he were prepared to divorce his wife and declare his support for the new regime, he could continue to act in Germany. Several other leading actors who had been opposed to the Nazis before 1933 switched allegiances. In answering the questionnaire by stating he was a Jew, Veidt rendered himself unemployable in Germany, but stated this sacrifice was worth it as there was nothing in the world that would compel him to break with his wife.Upon hearing about what Veidt had done, Goebbels remarked that he would never act in Germany again.

As noted above, he was also bisexual, a friend once stating: "He was very much in love with a beautiful girl whom I trained. I'll say frankly that Conrad also loved men, once in a while."

The man was a bi icon, an anti-fascist Jewish ally, and a goddamn hero and we stan.

today my therapist told me that sometimes negative feelings like guilt, anxiety, self loathing, etc are like the hiccups. they're uncomfortable, we don't like them, there's no way to turn them off; they can even be incapacitating for a while. we don't always know where they came from or when they'll go away, so sometimes instead of focusing on why we feel a certain way we need to get better at recognizing its temporary nature, keeping perspective, and enduring discomfort. i feel like a lot of self-improvement rhetoric is about pinpointing specific causes for negative thoughts/behaviors so you can eradicate them, but people with chronic mental illness really need to work on allowing themselves to experience these feelings without going into a downward spiral.

my therapist often reminds me that "why do i feel like this?" can sometimes be a dangerous question to ask yourself alone and leave you digging through all the times you've felt guilty/rejected/ashamed before. it's easy to spiral that way if you're not careful. with practice, i've started asking myself "what do i need to get through this?" the answers to that one are a bit more useful in the moment, and the shift has also helped me be kinder to myself when these feelings come up.

Tearful mom begs Texas lawmakers not to throw her in jail for supporting her trans child

Amber Briggle is "terrified... that my words will be used against me" and her son "will be taken from me...

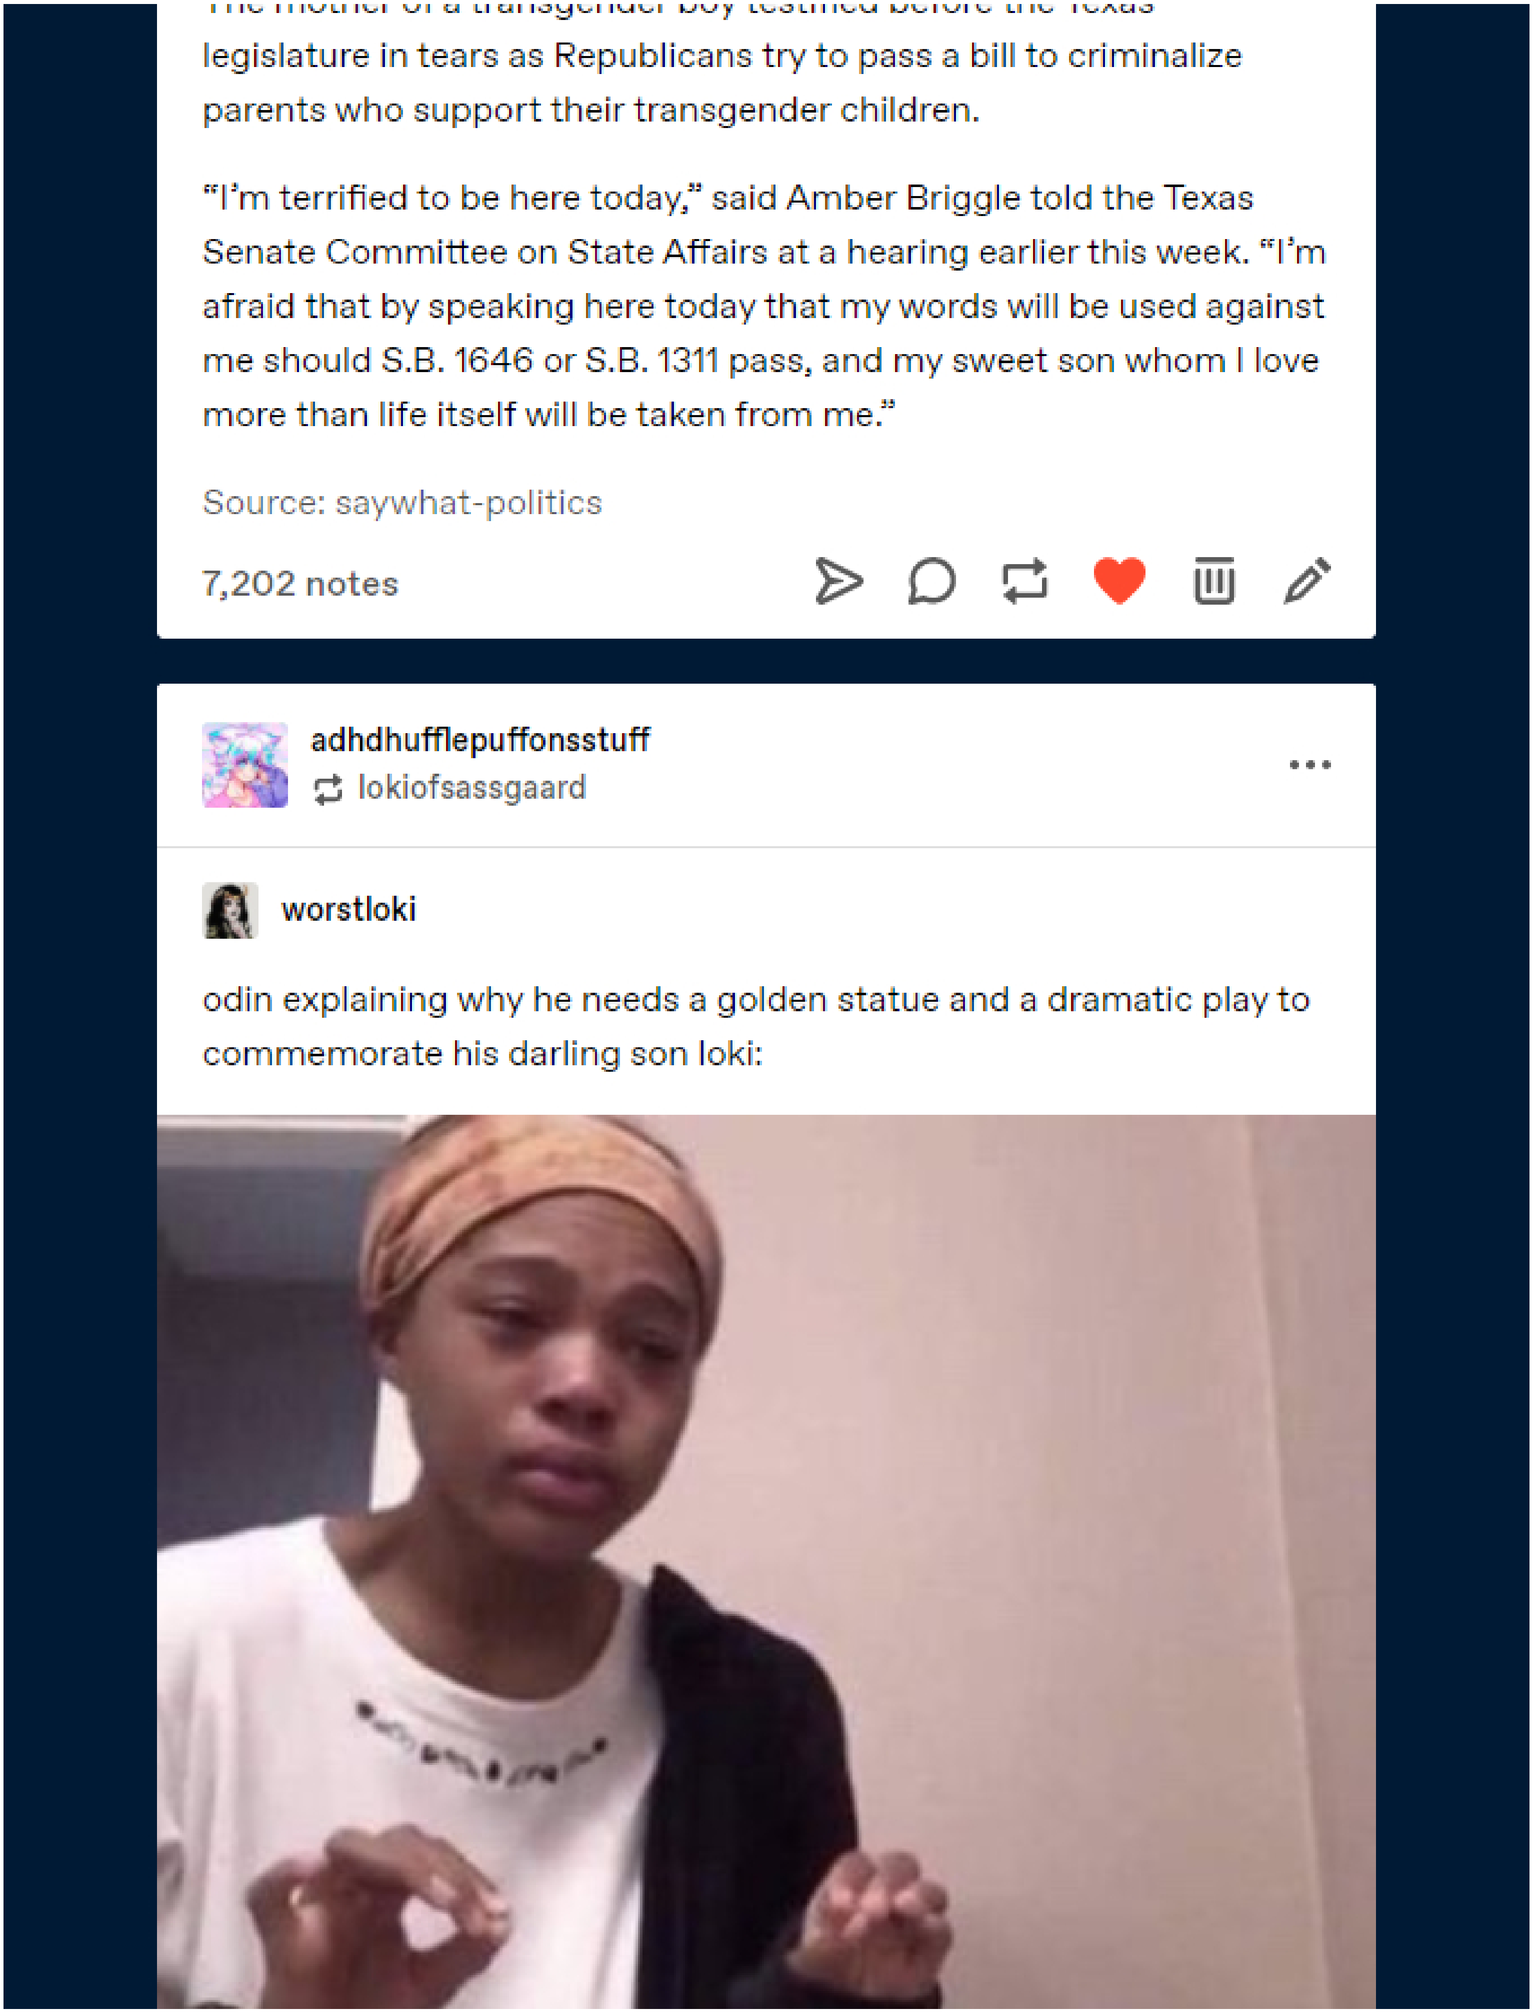
The mother of a transgender boy testified before the Texas



The mother of a transgender boy testified before the Texas legislature in tears as Republicans try to pass a bill to criminalize parents who support their transgender children.

"I'm terrified to be here today," said Amber Briggle told the Texas Senate Committee on State Affairs at a hearing earlier this week. "I'm afraid that by speaking here today that my words will be used against me should S.B. 1646 or S.B. 1311 pass, and my sweet son whom I love more than life itself will be taken from me."

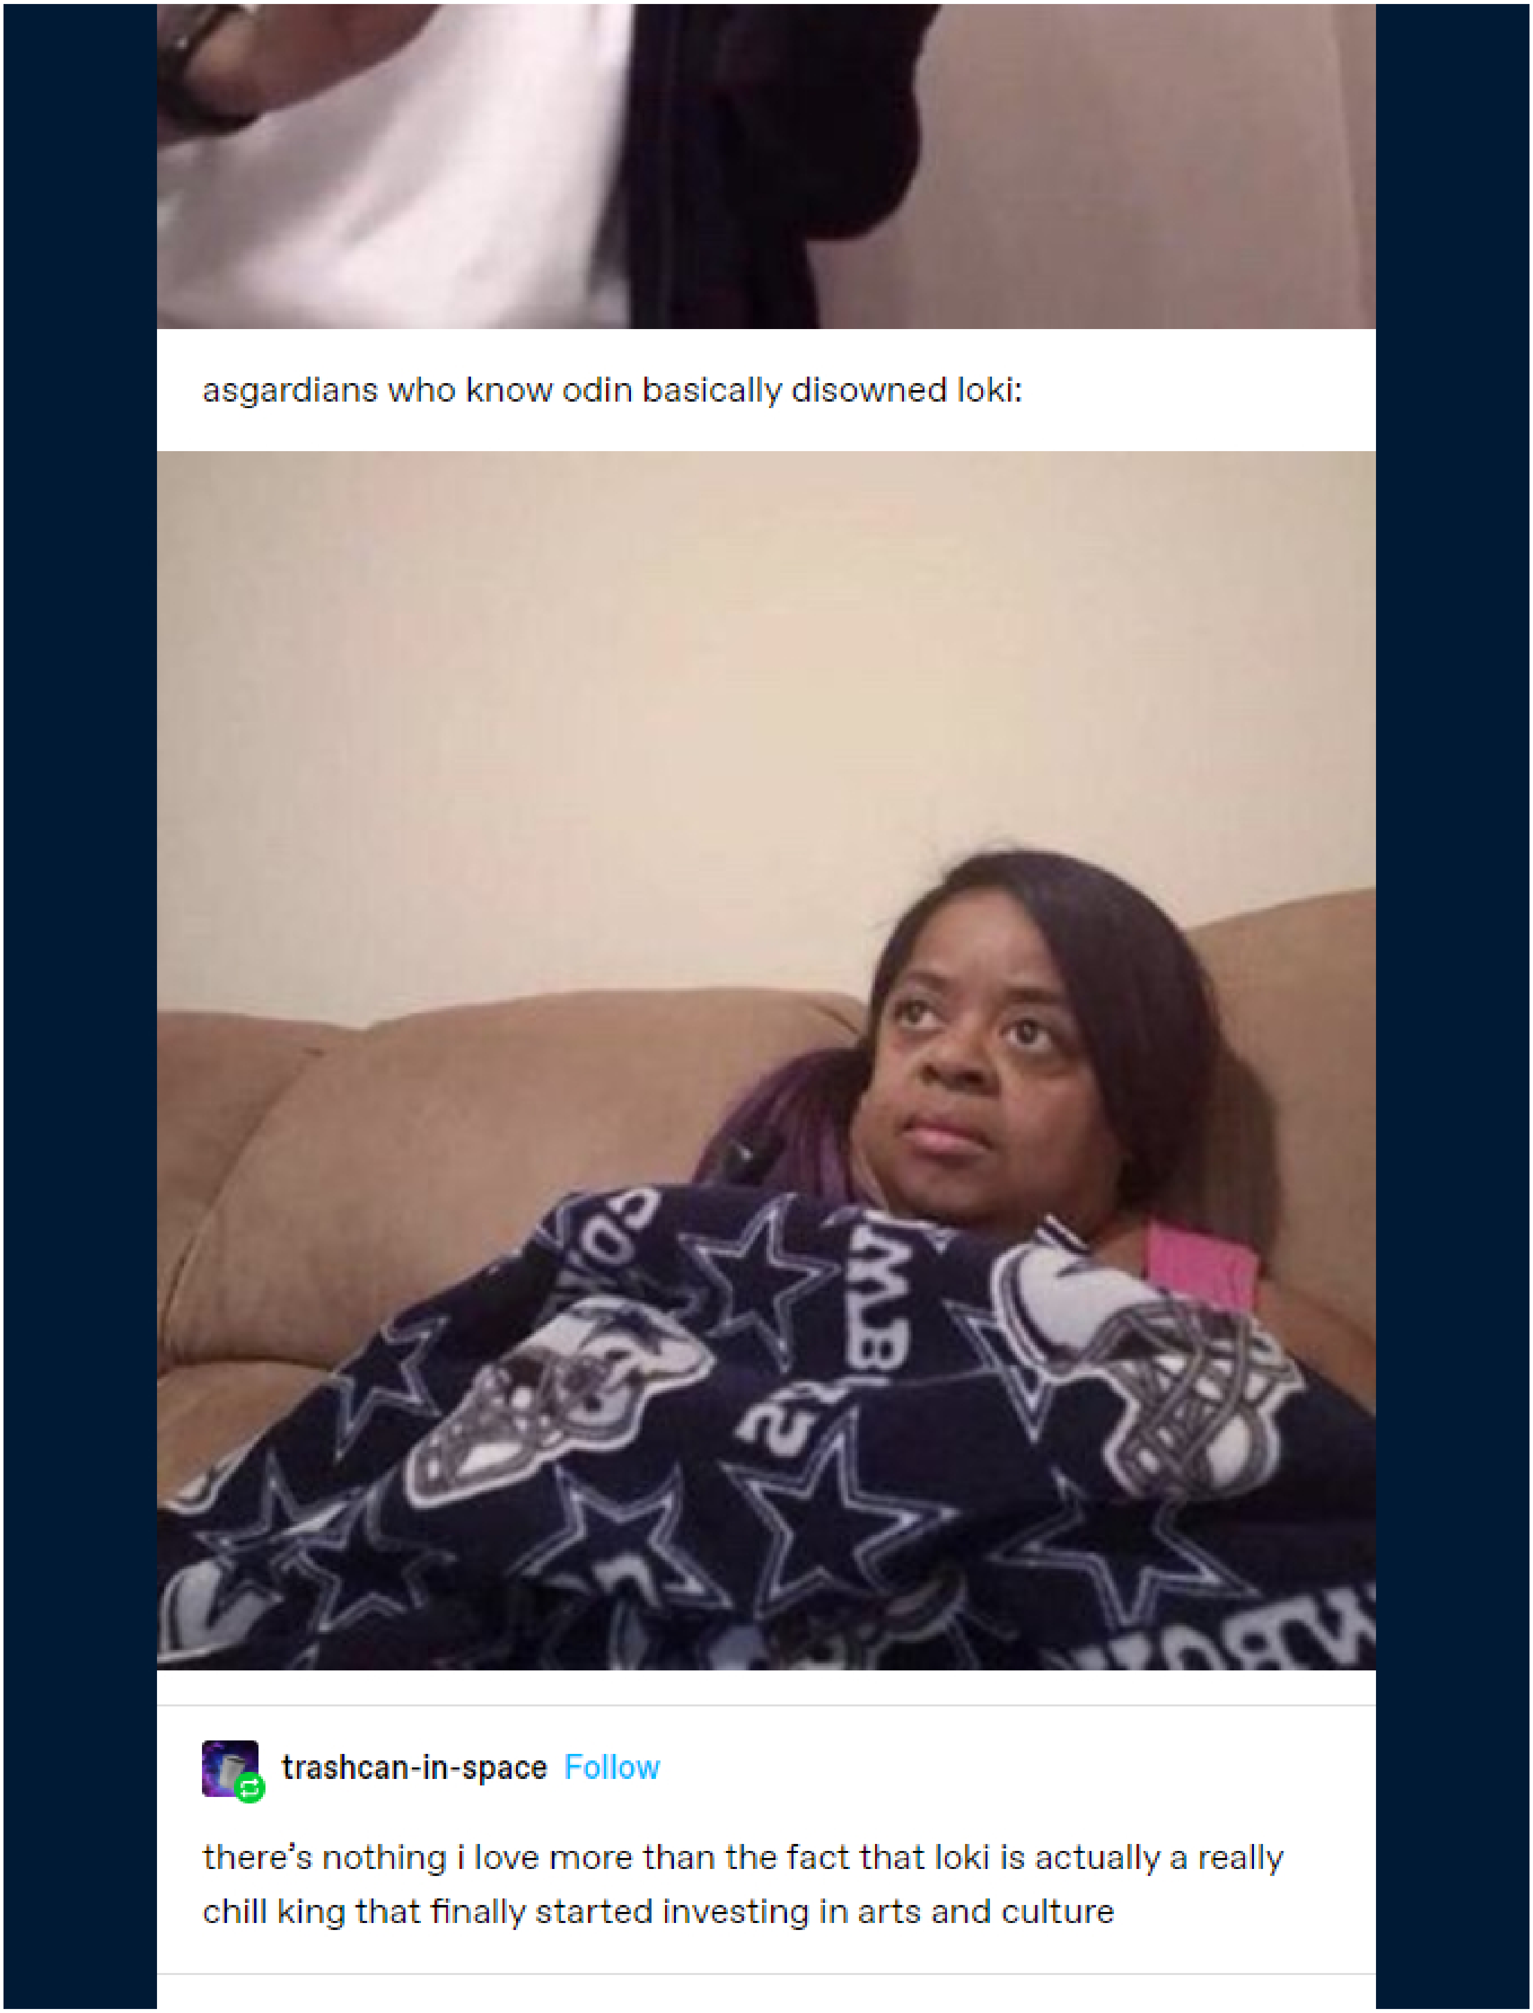
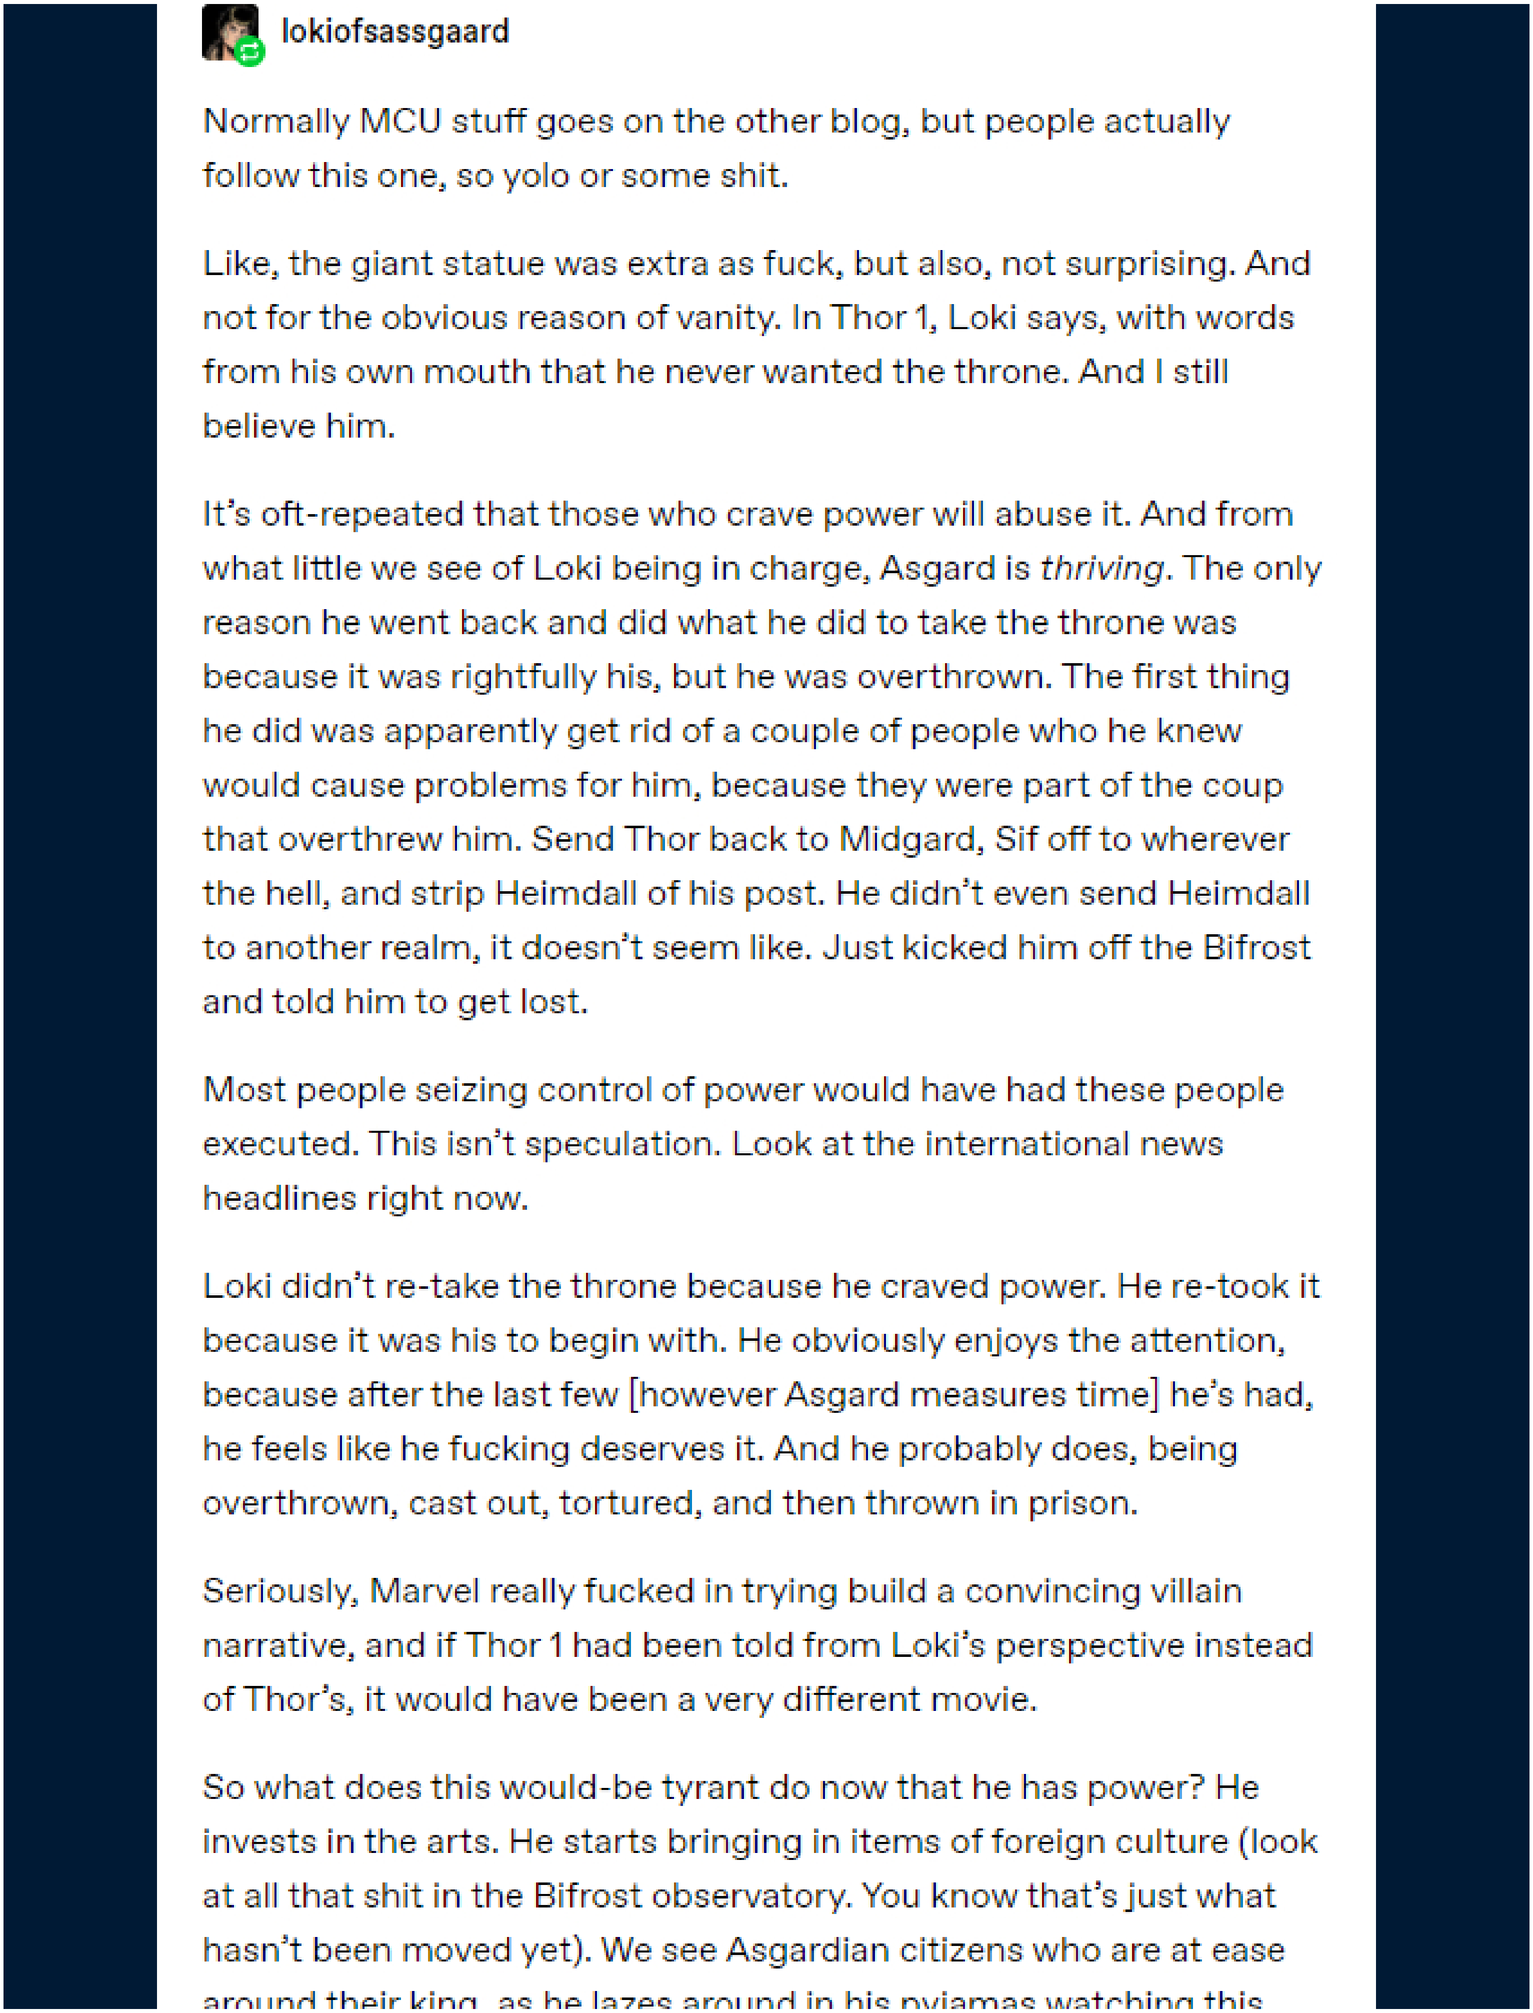
odin explaining why he needs a golden statue and a dramatic play to commemorate his darling son loki:



asgardians who know odin basically disowned loki:

trashcan-in-space

there's nothing i love more than the fact that loki is actually a really chill king that finally started investing in arts and culture



lokiofsassgaard

Normally MCU stuff goes on the other blog, but people actually follow this one, so yolo or some shit.

Like, the giant statue was extra as fuck, but also, not surprising. And not for the obvious reason of vanity. In Thor 1, Loki says, with words from his own mouth that he never wanted the throne. And I still believe him.

It's oft-repeated that those who crave power will abuse it. And from what little we see of Loki being in charge, Asgard is thriving. The only reason he went back and did what he did to take the throne was because it was rightfully his, but he was overthrown. The first thing he did was apparently get rid of a couple of people who he knew would cause problems for him, because they were part of the coup that overthrew him. Send Thor back to Midgard, Sif off to wherever the hell, and strip Heimdall of his post. He didn't even send Heimdall to another realm, it doesn't seem like. Just kicked him off the Bifrost and told him to get lost.

Most people seizing control of power would have had these people executed. This isn't speculation. Look at the international news headlines right now.

Loki didn't re-take the throne because he craved power. He re-took it because it was his to begin with. He obviously enjoys the attention, because after the last few [however Asgard measures time] he's had, he feels like he fucking deserves it. And he probably does, being overthrown, cast out, tortured, and then thrown in prison.

Seriously, Marvel really fucked in trying build a convincing villain narrative, and if Thor 1 had been told from Loki's perspective instead of Thor's, it would have been a very different movie.

So what does this would-be tyrant do now that he has power? He invests in the arts. He starts bringing in items of foreign culture (look at all that shit in the Bifrost observatory. You know that's just what hasn't been moved yet). We see Asgardian citizens who are at ease around their king, as he lazes around in his pyjamas watching this around their king, as he lazes around in his pyjamas watching this dreadful play he commissioned. When he reveals himself, the reaction isn't to run and scream in terror. Mostly, people are like, well that's weird, but carry on. Because he hasn't done anything that objectionable.

Contrast this to when an actual tyrant takes control. The first thing she does is start destroying any mark of forward progress, executing people, and making a return to the Old Ways. People cower and wimper around her, and rightfully so. She scary.

Which is why I think it's really fucking weird that Heimdall was out here radicalising people. I mean, people are always going to get radicalised, but what fear was he leaning on? What was Heimdall's 5G, gay frogs agenda that he was able to get so many people on side? Literally, his entire thing had nothing to do with anything in the first act. Heimdall radicalising people and moving them out of the city had nothing to do with Loki, and existed only to serve the fiction itself. There was no in-universe explanation that made sense. But it needed to happen so there was someone left to fight for the final battle. The script needed to have refugees, and the easiest way to make sure enough people survived to make it happen was to get them out of the city ahead of time.

Meanwhile, Loki's over here still not wanting to be king, but wanting what should be his. And the comics have a funny habit of mirroring the MCU, where Loki also doesn't want to be king, but refuses to give it up because it's rightfully his. And in both cases, he deals with this by just fucking around and apparently letting other people do all the heavy lifting. In the comics, he delegates his responsibilities to Drrf, and later Frösti. A person who craves power doesn't do that. A person who craves power wants to make all the decisions themself. And we see "Odin" in the middle of the day, still in his pyjamas, just being a lazy sack of shit. A king who wants to handle everything himself, make every decision himself, see to every problem and matter himself doesn't have time to sit around in his pyjamas in the middle of the day, watching some awful play. He only has time to do that if he's either letting the realm fall to shambles, which he clearly isn't, or delegating responsibilities and letting someone else handle the actual policy part.

Loki never wanted the throne. But for a brief moment in time, he finally got to be Thor's equal.

It's official! I'm pansexual!

Now, disclaimer: I'm not bi or lesbian; I'm only attracted to the opposite gender (men), and I like men of different kinds though my main specific preference is for men that are are cisgender yet androgynous/non binary (linproche/linenby)-presenting. So basically pan-heterosexual (what I like to call this! 😉😁). Though I can experience a romantic attraction to a platonic male friend or friends and have those relationships be on the border of platonic and romantic at the same time. But yeah, the 1st preference is my #1. I wonder if this makes sense. It's part of my sexuality spectrum which I realize is way more multilayered and complex. Anyways, a good Wednesday morning to you all! 💖💛💙❤️❤️ now that florida legislators have legalized child molestation because they hate trans people so much, i think its long long past time we bring back political assassination.

We gave everything we had to give. We reasoned, we shouted, we pleaded, we cried, we broke down & left the House Floor. But today, FL Republicans passed a bill not only banning trans kids from playing sports but subjecting kids whose sex may be disputed to genital inspections.

how does THIS protect children from anything? this just gives creepy adults a legitimate excuse to force children to undress

the-library-alcove Follow

Because to them, "Children" is not a class of persons that is defined by as "under the age of adulthood". To them, "Children" is a class defined as "sexually ignorant."

And since these people sexualize all LGBT identities, a child who identifies as trans is, to them, no longer a child because they longer exist in a state of blissful sexual ignorance.

This is funny and all but are we really choosing what cultures are okay to appropriate and which are not? Really?

i really enjoy the mutual harassment that occurs between a cat and their person. like. yeah its beautiful when our desires for attention and affection align but so often they do not, and just as i smother my cat with pets and kisses while she is clearly begrudging in tolerating it, so too will i sigh and do nothing when she heatbutts me and kneads my cheeks while im trying to sleep. and thats love.

gotta-get-that-pma Follow

Arguably the highest form of love is that of a cat and their person.

sometimes I get so angry thinking about 'The Imitation Game' that I have to go in a little 'upset big tantrum room' in my head for a calm down like, Benisnatch Cumberque played the same character he's always plays as an asshole genius and we were all supposed to be okay with it, but it's basically character slander at different parts of the movie Turing is described as 'arrogant, "inhuman," "narcissistic," and even "a monster," in the film he goes against those around him and is shown to periodically ignore and belittle his colleagues

And. I. Am. So. Angry.

Alan Turing was described by his friends and people that knew him as "intensely shy and kindly", he was said to "inspire loyalty and affection among those who appreciated his unusual gifts" and was "unfailingly generous with his time and expertise, especially toward younger recruits"

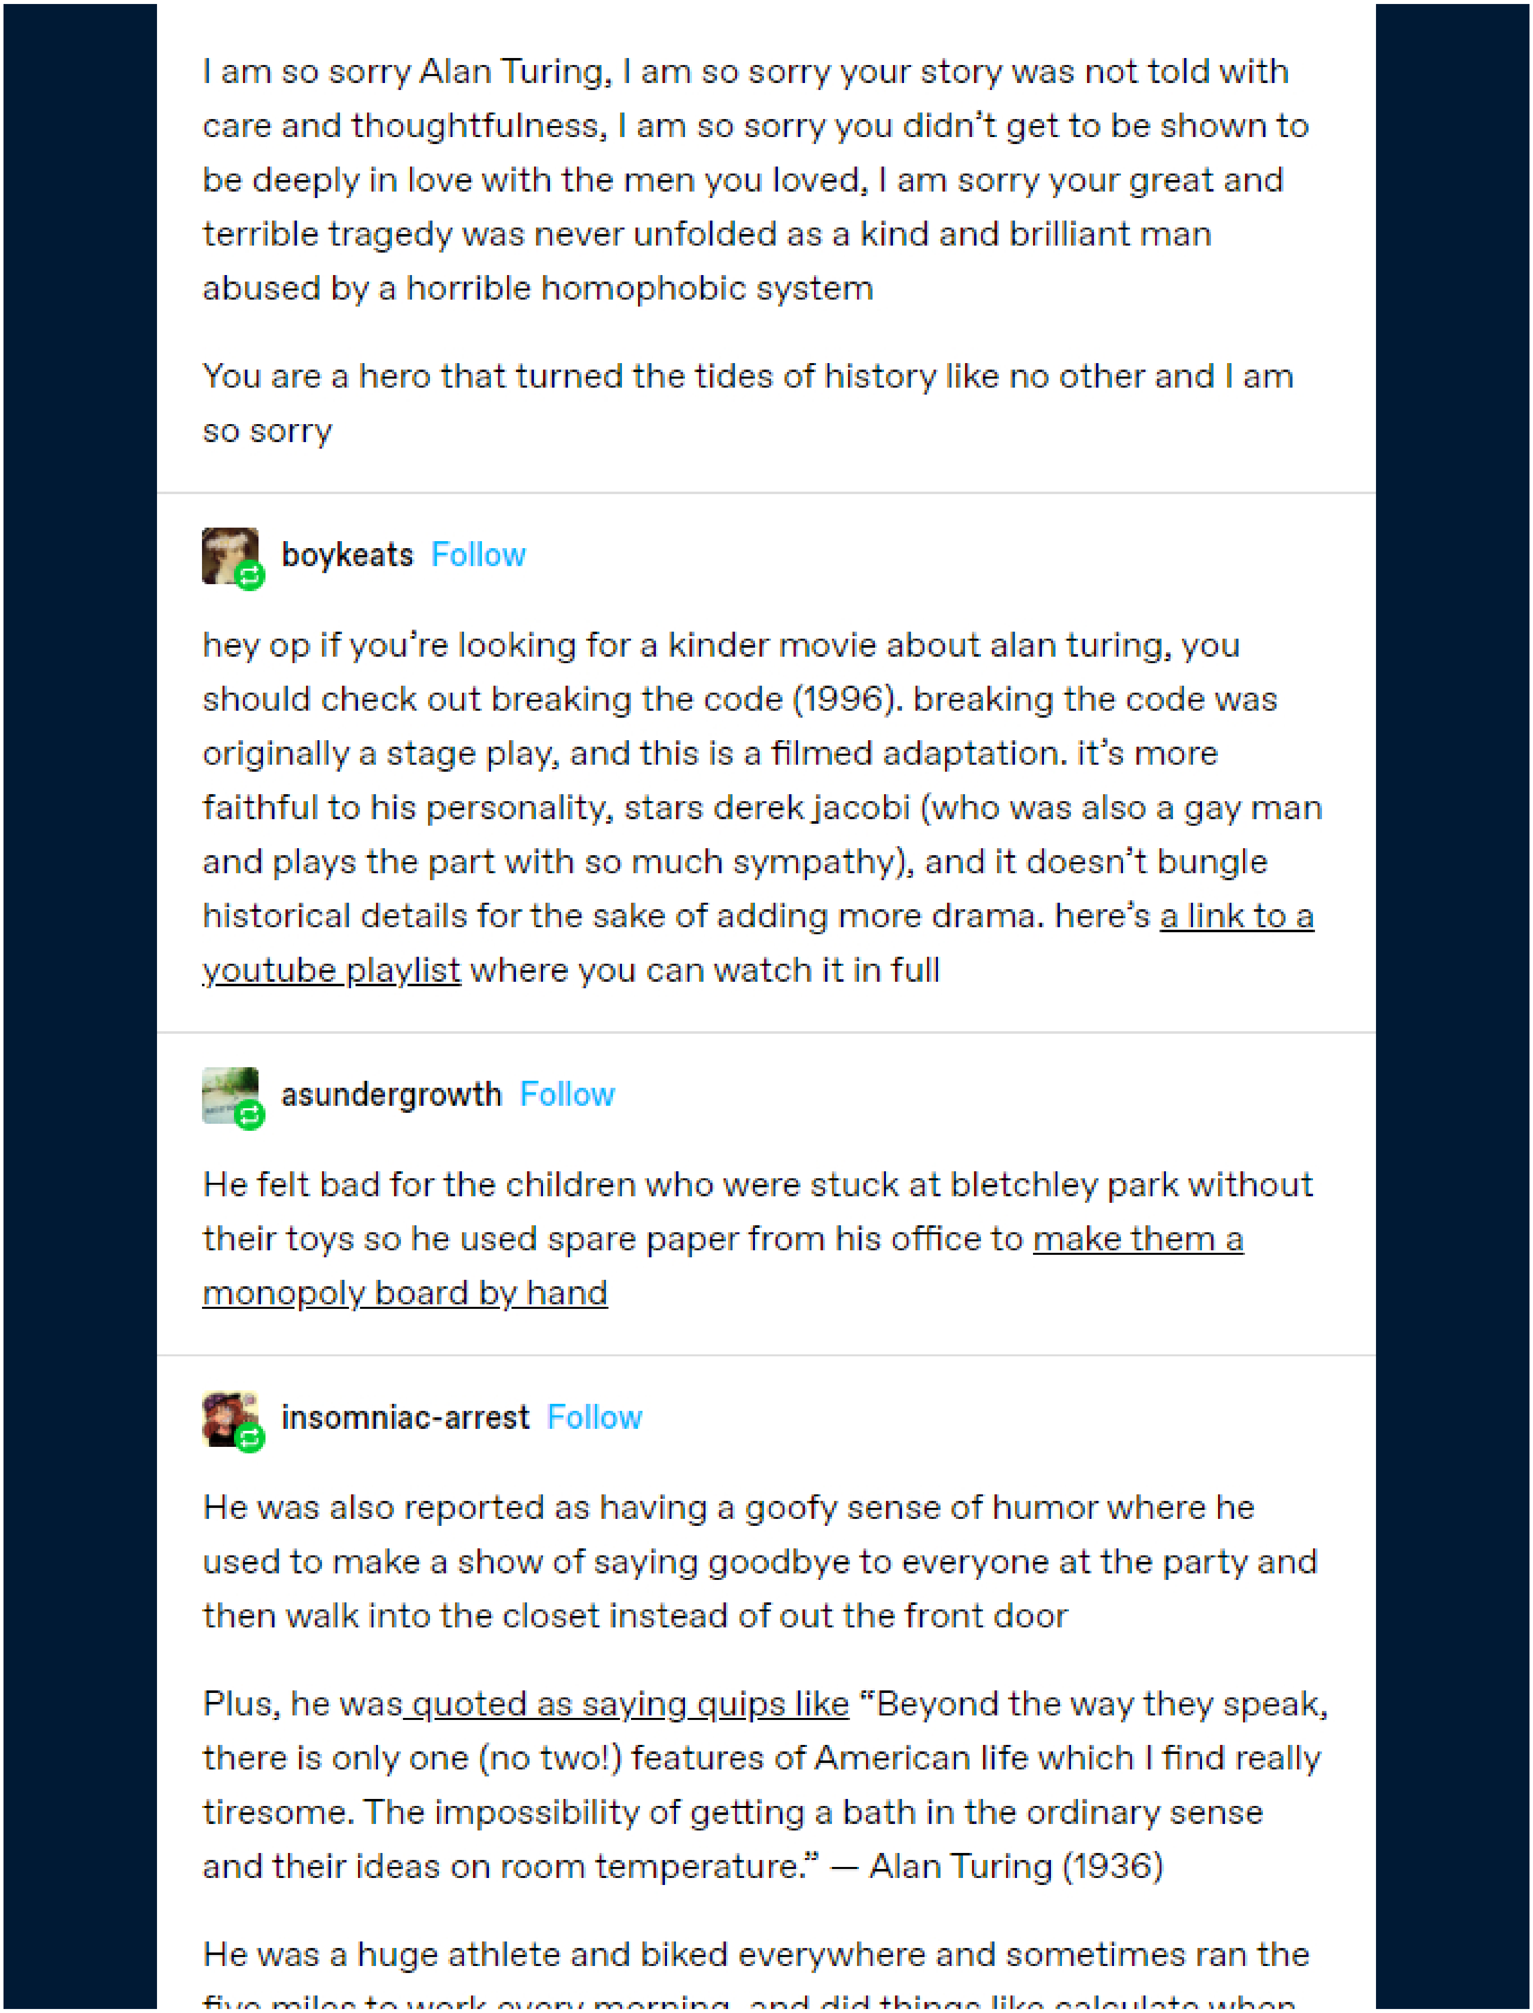
He was kind, he was kind, HE WAS KIND, he was kind he was kind and geeky and awkward and gay, I don't care if the whole of society doesn't find that compelling, I don't care if we don't value kindness as an attribute in men, he deserved to be loved and respected as he was, not as we wish he was



I am so sorry Alan Turing, I am so sorry your story was not told with care and thoughtfulness, I am so sorry you didn't get to be shown to be deeply in love with the men you loved, I am sorry your great and terrible tragedy was never unfolded as a kind and brilliant man abused by a horrible homophobic system

You are a hero that turned the tides of history like no other and I am so sorry

hey op if you're looking for a kinder movie about alan turing, you should check out breaking the code (1996). breaking the code was originally a stage play, and this is a filmed adaptation. it's more faithful to his personality, stars derek jacobi (who was also a gay man and plays the part with so much sympathy), and it doesn't bungle historical details for the sake of adding more drama. here's a link to a youtube playlist where you can watch it in full

He felt bad for the children who were stuck at bletchley park without their toys so he used spare paper from his office to make them a monopoly board by hand

insomniac-arrest Follow

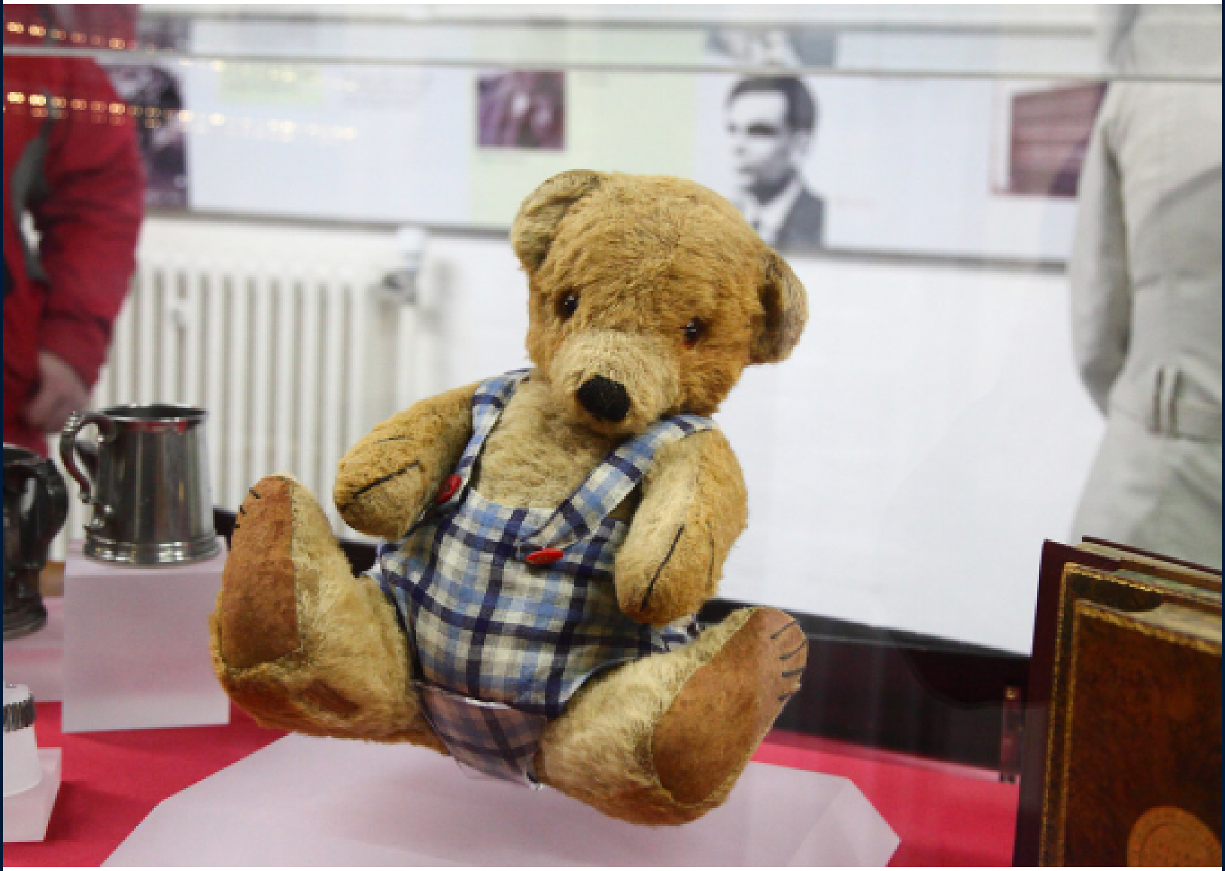
He was also reported as having a goofy sense of humor where he used to make a show of saying goodbye to everyone at the party and then walk into the closet instead of out the front door

Plus, he was quoted as saying quips like "Beyond the way they speak, there is only one (no two!) features of American life which I find really tiresome. The impossibility of getting a bath in the ordinary sense and their ideas on room temperature." — Alan Turing (1936)

He was a huge athlete and biked everywhere and sometimes ran the five miles to work every morning, and did things like calculate when five miles to work every morning, and did things like calculate when his bike chain would break so he could keep riding the thing despite it being ancient

He was still "odd" according to his coworkers as he sometimes wore a gasmask to work to avoid spring allergies and used to chain his coffee mug up to avoid theft at the office, but the same colleagues described him as very friendly, open, and thoughtful as well if not shy.

and finally, of course, there was Porgy



He used to practice his Cambridge lectures in front of this stuffed bear he got in college named Porgy and was delighted when his mom sewed it a little outfit. He kept the bear with him throughout life.
